Where the design to kill is formed with "premeditation" and deliberation, it is not necessary for it to exist any definite length of time before the killing takes place. State v. Daniel, 51 S. E. 858, 859, 139 N. C. 549.

An instruction that, to constitute "murder in the first degree," there must be proof of malice and premeditation, and that if either of these elements is absent there can be no conviction for that grade of homicide, that it is as much "premeditation" if it enters into the mind of the guilty agent a moment before the act as if it entered years before, and that it is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by the concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation, but that, when there is no time and opportunity to deliberate thought, the unlawful killing cannot be murder in the first degree, is correct. Welty v. State (Ind.) 100 N. E. 73, 75.

Same—Deliberation and premeditation

In homicide, a charge that the deliberation and "premeditation" necessary to constitute murder in the first degree need not exist for any stated period of time, but it is sufficient to constitute murder in the first degree if defendant had any time to think, and did think, and struck the blow as a result of an intention to kill, produced by even a momentary mental operation, provided the other elements of the crime also coexisted, was proper. Franklin v. State, 39 South. 79, 981, 145 Ala. 669 (citing Cleveland v. State, 5 South. 426, 86 Ala. 1, 6).

In a prosecution for murder, an instruction that the words "deliberate" and "premeditated," as used in the statute defining murder, mean only that the slayer must intend, before the blow is delivered, though only for an instant, that death will be the result, is proper. Dunn v. State, 39 South. 47, 149, 143 Ala. 67 (citing Daughdrill v. State, 21 South. 378, 113 Ala. 32; Cleveland v. State, 5 South. 426, 85 Ala. 1; Smith v. State, 68 Ala. 424; Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 6).

While, under the statute, to constitute murder in the first degree, premeditation and deliberation must precede the act of killing, no particular lapse of time need occur between the two; it being enough that sufficient time elapses for the jury to find as a matter of fact that premeditation and deliberation did exist. People v. Jackson, 89 N. E. 924, 25, 196 N. Y. 837.

The words "deliberation" and "premeditation" necessarily imply some appreciable length of time. To deliberate and to meditate on an act means to think it over and to weigh the consequences, and, when there is no appreciable time therefor, there can be no deliberation, and no premeditation. State v. Arata, 105 Pac. 227, 228, 56 Wash. 185, 21 Ann. Cas. 242.

By "premeditation" and "deliberation" is meant that "the reason and judgment is exercised, that the fact of killing is weighed and considered, and that as a result there is in the mind the purpose to kill, which must precede the act of killing, although the length of time between its formation and the killing is not material." State v. Roberson, 64 S. E. 182, 184, 150 N. C. 837.

Both "deliberation" and "premeditation," which are essentials of murder, involve a prior purpose to do the act in question. Blevins v. State, 107 S. W. 893, 894, 85 Ark. 195.

PREMEDITATED DESIGN

See, also, Design.

"Premeditated design," as applied to the law of homicide, means "premeditated intent." "Premeditation" is composed of "pre" and "meditation," and means the act of premeditating; previous deliberation or forethought. In Lovett v. State, 11 South. 550, 30 Fla. 142, 17 L. R. A. 705, the terms "premeditated design" and "premeditation" are used as synonyms. Keigans v. State, 41 South. 886, 888, 52 Fla. 57 (citing Stand. Dict.; People v. Majone, 91 N. Y. 211; People v. Decker, 51 N. E. 1018, 157 N. Y. 186; Carter v. State, 22 Fla. 553, 559).

The words "premeditated design" in St. 1898, § 4338, defining murder in the first degree, merely signifies an intent to kill, sudden intent being excluded. Montgomery v. State, 116 N. W. 376, 379, 136 Wis. 119, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 339.

"There is no difference between the terms 'design' and 'premeditated design' as used in the statute defining murder and manslaughter. Design means intent, and both words essentially imply premeditation. The premeditation of the statute does not exclude sudden intent, and need not be slow or last long." An instruction that if the homicide occurred while accused was in a heat of passion rendering him incapable of forming a "deliberate premeditated" design to kill, etc., he should be convicted of manslaughter in the third degree, is not erroneous, though neither of the quoted words appear in the statute defining that degree. Dillon v. State, 119 N. W. 352, 356, 137 Wis. 655, 16 Ann. Cas. 913 (quoting and adopting definition in Hogan v. State, 86 Wis. 226).

The meaning of the words "premeditated design," as used in the statutory definition of the crime of murder in the first degree, "not being technical words of the common law, is to be found in their meaning as used in the best dictionaries and standard authorities. 'Premeditation' is composed of 'pre' and 'meditation,' and means the act of premeditating; previous deliberation; forethought. Deliberation and premeditation are synonymous. Century Dict. 'And Isaac went out to meditate in the field at eventide.' Gen. xxiv, 63. 'This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night.' Josh. 1, 8. 'Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them.' 1 Tim. iv, 15. 'Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable,' etc. Psalm xix, 14. The word 'meditate,' as thus used in the Bible, implies all the thoughts which can be generated in the mind by the exercise of the discursive or regulative faculties. It certainly implies everything that is implied in the word 'deliberate' and more." In a prosecution for murder, an instruction to the effect that no specific time is required to constitute premeditation, but if the mind of the accused was in a condition to form a purpose, there was sufficient time for the forming of that purpose, and for the mind to be conscious of that purpose to kill. It is sufficient time to constitute premeditation, and if the jury believe beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had fully formed a purpose to shoot and kill, and that he was conscious of that purpose when he fired the shot, they would find him guilty of murder in the first degree, does not afford a clear and correct interpretation of the meaning and design of the Legislature in the use of the phrase "premeditated design" in a statute providing that the unlawful killing of a human being, when perpetrated from a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or any human being, or when committed in the perpetration of or in the attempt to perpetrate any arson, etc., shall be murder in the first degree. Cook v. State, 35 South. 665, 671, 678, 46 Fla. 20.

A design to effect death is premeditated, within the meaning of the law relating to murder, if the intention to take life is deliberately formed in the mind before the act is done which results in death, no matter for how short a time. Fooshee v. State, 108 Pac. 554, 560, 8 Okl. Cr. 866.

"Premeditated design" as an element of first degree murder does not necessarily require existence of a design for any definite or considerable period of time before its formation and the homicide. It is sufficient if accused had when he inflicted the fatal wound a design to take human life and inflicted such wound to accomplish such design. Cupps v. State, 97 N. W. 210, 220, 120 Wis. 504, 102 Am. St. Rep. 996.

"Intent to kill means just what the ordinary signification of the words suggest, whether it be described by the words 'actual intent,' 'design,' or 'premeditated design' makes no difference. When we leave entirely out of view those subtleties, often indulged in, in discoursing on the meaning of 'premeditated design,' and give to words the meaning ordinarily attributed to them, the person who effects the death of another by design does so intentionally, and the design or intent is understood to necessarily precede the act by which the purpose is accomplished. In other words, the intent is understood to be premeditated, or thought of, because, without mental action, the purpose could not be formed. So, when it is said that the slayer intentionally caused the death of his victim, it is at the same time said that he caused it by design, or premeditated design. That the word 'premeditated,' as used in the statutes on the subject of felonious homicide, has no other significance than that the design must precede the homicidal act, is indicated from the evident purpose of the statute makers to give the same meaning to the term 'premeditated design,' where used inclusively in murder in the first degree, as to 'design,' where that word alone is used exclusively in murder in the third degree and manslaughter in the first, second, and third degrees." Cupps v. State, 98 N. W. 546, 549, 120 Wis. 504, 102 Am. St. Rep. 996.

Design means intent, and so "premeditated design" must mean premeditated intent; but a premeditated design to kill means more than a mere intent to kill, and hence, in a prosecution for murder, an instruction that "premeditated design to kill means an intent to kill, design means intent, and both words imply premeditation," was misleading and erroneous. Stokes v. State, 44 South. 759, 760, 54 Fla. 109.

Where an information for first degree murder charged that the killing was with a premeditated design to effect death, the words "premeditated design" should be construed as equivalent to malice aforethought. State v. Selfert, 118 Pac. 746, 748, 65 Wash. 596.

In a prosecution for statutory murder in the first degree, the state claimed that accused killed deceased with premeditated design. The court charged that premeditated design was simply an intent to kill, that "design" meant "intent," and that both words implied premeditation, that premeditation did not exclude sudden intent, and that whether it be described by the words "actual intent," "design," or "premeditated design" was immaterial; that the intent was understood to be premeditated because without mental action the purpose could not be formed; that, when there were no circumstances to prevent the presumption, the law would presume that the unlawful act was intentional and malicious; that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, he who takes the life of another by some act naturally calculated to produce death would be presumed to have intended that result and to be guilty of murder in the first degree, it being presumed that such person intended the result that followed, and must be guilty of murder in the absence of evidence that the homicide was justifiable or excusable or such as to raise a reasonable doubt on the question; thus that where accused fired a shot, the weapon being aimed at a vital part of the body, and death ensued as a natural result, the presumption of fact as to the intention to take life, in the absence of any explanatory circumstances, makes a prima facie case for the prosecution, the state not being required to negative any probability that there were circumstances reducing the homicide below that of murder in the first degree, or excusing or justifying it. Held, that such charge was correct in so far as it related to statutory murder in the first degree under the facts proved. Hedger v. State, 128 N. W. 80, 90, 144 Wis. 279.

An instruction that, to constitute "murder in the first degree," there must be proof of malice and premeditation, and that if either of these elements is absent there can be no conviction for that grade of homicide, that a "premeditated design or purpose" is one resulting from thought and reflection, a design conceived and afterwards so deliberately considered as to become resolved and fixed, that when the design to take human life is formed after deliberation, and there is adequate time and opportunity for deliberate thought, then, no matter how soon the felonious killing follows the formation of the settled purpose, it is murder in the first degree, that there need be no appreciable space of time between the formation of the intention to kill and the killing, is correct. Welty v. State (Ind.) 100 N. E. 73, 75.

An instruction that, if the facts and circumstances in the case furnish satisfactory evidence of a deliberate mind on the part of the person killing, to do the killing at the time he does the act that results in the killing and show a formed design on the part of the person killing to take the life of the person slain or some other person, then the killing will be by "premeditated design," is correct. Kent v. State, 126 Pac. 1040, 1042, 8 Okl. Cr. 188.

The phrase "premeditated design to effect death," as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2167, defining murder as "homicide when perpetrated without authority of law and with a 'premeditated design to effect death' of the person killed," means a purpose or intention to take life, previously formed or thought upon before it is executed. There is no substantial difference between an act performed under these conditions and one done purposely, of one's deliberate and premeditated malice, and with intent to kill. Walcher v. Territory, 90 Pac. 887, 888, 18 Okl. 528.

PREMEDITATED KILLING

In a prosecution for murder, an instruction that if a slayer has any time to think, however short, and does think, and then strikes the blow as the result of an intention to kill produced by this momentary operation of the mind, this would be a "premeditated killing," is correct. Green v. State, 39 South. 362, 365, 143 Ala. 2.

PREMEDITATED MALICE

"In murder in the first degree, 'premeditated malice' requires that there should be time and opportunity for deliberate thought, and that, after the mind conceives the thought of taking the life, the conception is meditated upon, and a deliberate determination formed to do the act. That being done, then, no difference how soon the fatal resolve is carried into execution, it is murder in the first degree." State v. Williams, 105 N. W. 265, 272, 96 Minn. 351 (quoting the definition in Leighton v. People, 88 N. Y. 117).

A charge that premeditated malice exists where the intention to unlawfully take life is deliberately formed in the mind, and that determination meditated upon before the fatal stroke is given, and that there need be no particular length of time between the formation of the intention to kill and the killing amply stated the necessity for deliberation and time therefor, but that no definite standard as to lapse of time was necessary; the words "no particular" being used in the explanatory sense that no fixed or definite time was necessary, it being only necessary that there be actual time for deliberation. State v. Bridgman, 97 Pac. 1006, 1008, 51 Wash. 18.

"Maliciously" and "malice aforethought" do not mean the same thing. Malice comprehends ill will, a wickedness of disposition, cruelty, recklessness, a mind regardless of social duty, etc.; while "malice aforethought" or "premeditated" design has a more intense meaning. They comprehend, not only what is included within the term "malice," but in addition thereto mean "premeditated malice." Brett v. State, 47 South. 781, 783, 94 Misc. 669 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4304; 1 Bish. Cr. Law [8th Ed.] p. 261; Patterson v. State, 66 Ind. 185; Tutt v. Commonwealth, 46 S. W. 875, 104 Ky. 299; State v. Green, 7 South. 793, 42 La. Ann. 644; State v. Curtis, 70 Mo. 594; Cravey v. State, 35 S. W. 658, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 61 Am. St. Rep. 833).

PREMEDITATEDLY

"Premeditatedly" means thought of beforehand for any length of time, however short. State v. Myers, 121 S. W. 131, 135, 221 Mo. 598; State v. Sharp, 82 S. W. 134, 136, 183 Mo. 715; State v. Atchley, 84 S. W. 984, 988, 186 Mo. 174; State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 686, 194 Mo. 717; State v. Kinder, 83 S. W. 964, 966, 969, 184 Mo. 276; State v. Todd, 92 S. W. 674, 676, 194 Mo. 377; State v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 2, 5, 200 Mo. 1.

PREMISES

See Inclosed Premises; On or About the Premises; On the Premises; Property On or Near Premises; These Conveyed Premises.

Engaged or employed about the premises, see Engaged.

Keep on premises, see Keep.

In common parlance the term "premises" is broader than the term "room." As applied to the occupancy of real property it embraces any definite portion of land and the building and appurtenant structures, over which the owner or occupant has the right and does exercise authority and control. Kunkel v. Abell, 84 N. E. 503, 504, 170 Ind. 305.

Coal mine

In ejectment for a coal mine, the judgment was not objectionable for adjudging that plaintiff recover possession of the "following described premises, to wit: two-fifths of one-half of the coal situated under the surface," etc.; the word "premises" only referring to the mineral estate. Gordon v. Park, 117 S. W. 1163, 1167, 219 Mo. 600.

In an action for injuries to the surface of land over a mine belonging to defendant, plaintiff's prayers were not prejudicial to defendant in the use of the word "premises" to indicate plaintiff's surface ownership, instead of instructing the jury in terms that defendant owned the mineral rights. Piedmont & George's Creek Coal Co. v. Kearney, 79 Atl. 1013, 1018, 114 Md. 490.

Fee

The word "premises" has different meanings, dependent on its connection and the object to which it is applied, and it oftentimes describes the fee of land; but it may signify something less extensive where the context requires it, and to determine the meaning of the word used in an instrument the court must bear in mind the subject about which the parties were contracting and their general purpose. Old South Ass'n v. Codman, 97 N. E. 766, 767, 211 Mass. 211.

House or building

In a lease granting to plaintiff the use of park land on which stand the premises owned by her, where there was undisputed evidence that there were buildings on the park lands owned by plaintiff, the word "premises" may be construed as meaning buildings. Nichols v. Eustis, 131 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 146 App. Div. 475.

An owner contracted to sell land on which the purchaser, as lessee, had erected buildings, with a right to remove the same.

The contract provided that the owner should advance the purchaser a specified sum, and that the purchaser should keep "said premises insured for the benefit of the owner." The purchaser gave to the owner a bill of sale of the buildings and improvements, which recited that it was supplemental to the contract for the purchase of the real estate and security only for the payments called for, and that it should be void when all the payments were made. At the time of the sale there were other buildings on the land than those which belonged to the purchaser. The word "premises," as used in the contract, which the purchaser was to keep insured for the benefit of the owner, referred to buildings other than those belonging to the purchaser as lessee. Dankwardt v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 98 N. W. 603, 604, 123 Iowa, 70.

Though a complaint and warrant merely to search the premises of a person would not authorize the search of a dwelling house, where complaint alleges that intoxicating liquors were and still are kept and deposited by a certain person in a dwelling house occupied by him, and the location of which was particularly described, and the warrant in setting forth the complaint designates the locus in the exact language of the description therein contained, and then alleges that complainant prayed that due process be issued to search the premises hereinbefore mentioned, the description of the place to be searched is sufficiently definite and certain. State v. Comolli, 63 Atl. 326, 101 Me. 47.

In conveyancing

The term "premises" may or may not include land, but may be held to mean only the right, title, or interest conveyed; and its exact meaning, when found in contracts and conveyances, must be determined according to the intention of the parties as ascertained from the contract and the facts and circumstances attending its making. Merchants' Bldg. Imp. Co. v. Chicago Exch. Bldg. Co., 71 N. E. 22, 27, 210 Ill. 26, 102 Am. St. Rep. 145.

In a covenant in a lease prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the premises, the word "premises" should be construed as including not only the land actually described in the deeds, but all rights and property of the nature of land which belonged to the grantees named therein by virtue of their title to the upland. In includes the valuable property rights to land below high-water mark which followed as an incident to the lease. Silberman v. Mayer, 96 N. Y. Supp. 928, 931, 48 Misc. Rep. 468.

Where the parties to a lease interpreted it to mean that the lessee was entitled to hold thereunder only the ground floor of the building, and he in fact held only that part of the building, and a sublessee, before making his contract, was apprised of such interpretation, the language, "the premises which he holds under lease," used to describe the property subleased, means the property actually held by the lessee, rather than that which he might have held had the lease been otherwise interpreted. Hirsh v. Valloft, 46 South. 103, 105, 121 La. 66.

In liquor laws

The word "premises," as used in Rev. St. c. 29, § 49, commanding an officer to enter the place or premises before named and therein to search for intoxicating liquors, signifies it as a distinct and definite locality. It may mean a room or a shop or a building or a definite area, but in either case the locality is fixed; otherwise the use of the word would be misapplied. State v. Fezzette, 69 Atl. 1073, 1075, 103 Me. 467.

The word "premises," in Gen. Laws 1909, c. 123, § 52, imposing a penalty for the sale or keeping for sale by retail druggists without first obtaining a license of enumerated liquors, and declaring that the finding of any liquors enumerated on the premises of any retail druggist in quantities exceeding one-half gallon shall be evidence of a violation of the law, when considered in section 53-55 and chapter 178, punishing sales by druggists without prescription and not to be drunk on the premises, etc., and prohibiting a person, unless a registered or registered assistant pharmacist, from disposing of medicines, etc., means the store or shop of any retail druggist, as distinguished from his residence. State v. Almy, 79 Atl. 962, 964, 32 R. I. 415.

Under Code, § 2460, providing that any person operating a brewery permitting any drinking of such products or selling the same at retail "upon the premises of any such manufacturing establishment" shall forfeit, etc., the word "premises" is limited to the buildings occupied by and the ground used in connection with such establishment; hence, where a brewery had an entrance into the office of its general manager and an entrance from his office into a saloon in the same building, the brewery paying the mulct taxes for the sale of the liquor by retail therein, the operation of the saloon is not a violation of the statute, where the entrance from the brewery was used by no one to obtain liquor, and the employes of the brewery who obtained their liquor there entered only from the outside. Orke v. McManus (Iowa) 115 N. W. 580, 581.

Liquor Tax Law, § 11, subd. 1 (Laws 1896, p. 51, c. 112), provides for the issuance of liquor tax certificates authorizing the sale of liquor in buildings occupied as hotels. A bond executed by an applicant for a liquor tax certificate was conditioned that the obligor should not permit the "premises" to become disorderly, etc. Held, that the "premises" referred to in the bond included the rooms of the hotel in which the liquor business was carried on, and hence permitting such rooms to become disorderly was a breach of the bond. Cullinan v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 82 N. Y. Supp. 695, 697, 84 App. Div. 292.

Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1897, p. 225, c. 312, § 24, subd. 1), prior to the amendment made by Laws 1905, p. 145, c. 104, made it unlawful to traffic in liquor within one-half mile of the building and "premises" of any state hospital, and the amendment added the words "or lands" after the word "premises." On a petition for the cancellation of a liquor tax certificate, it was stipulated that defendant, prior to the amendment, had been legally selling liquor at the place in question. Held, that "lands" was synonymous with "premises," and in view of the stipulation there could be no cancellation of the certificate, whether defendant was carrying on his business within one-half mile of lands owned and used by a state hospital and contiguous to it, or within one-half mile of the buildings, or not. The terms "premises" and "lands" are synonymous, and, if there is any distinction between the words, it is that the word "premises" is more inclusive. According to Bouvier and Worcester's Dict., the word "premises" is defined as "lands and tenements." According to the Century Dict., it is defined as "lands and houses or tenements." According to the Standard Dict., it is defined as "land or lands; land with its appurtenances." In re Cullinan, 99 N. Y. Supp. 374, 375, 113 App. Div. 485.

Insured building

The words "building" and "premises" are sometimes used interchangeably in prohibitive clauses of insurance policies. These words were so used in the clause of a policy prohibiting the keeping of explosives. Kenesick v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc., 103 S. W. 957, 959, 205 Mo. 294.

A fire policy stipulated that if the "premises" described should become vacant the policy should be void. The property insured was a barn on a farm referred to in the policy as being owned by the assured. The contract was made on a form containing blanks adapted to many kinds of property, such as "farm implements * * * on the premises," "grain * * * on the premises," etc. The policy provided that it should not be construed to cover property located elsewhere than on the "premises" or in the buildings described. Held, that the provision that the policy should be void if the premises should become vacant had reference to the occupancy of the farm, the word "premises" meaning the farm, and the fact that the barn had never had anything in it did not defeat a recovery for its loss. Home Ins. Co. v. Gagen, 76 N. E. 927, 928, 38 Ind. App. 680.

Land

The word "premises" often means land, but it is equally well adapted to designate the interest or estate. Smith v. Pollard, 19 Vt. 272.

The phrase "property sold," in the statutory definition of a redemptioner as being one holding a lien by judgment or mortgage on the property sold, applies to "land" or "premises," as those words are commonly used. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serumgard, 117 N. W. 454, 463, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

An affidavit, charging that accused entered on "the premises" of a person named, in charge of another person named, charges an entry on land within Revisal 1905, § 3688, for the word "premises" and the word "land" are synonymous. An affidavit, alleging that accused unlawfully and willfully entered on the premises of a person named, in charge of another person, who was acting as her agent, charges that the person named was by her agent in actual possession of the land. State v. Yellowday, 67 S. E. 480, 482, 152 N. C. 793.

Right of way

City Charter of Buffalo, § 288, provides that it is the duty of the owner or occupant of any premises in the city to lay sidewalks in front of them whenever ordered by the common council, and that, if the same is not done, they shall be laid by the city, and the expense assessed upon such premises. A railroad company used the lowered tracks through part of the street, which street was intersected by others. Held that, as to the right of way in the street, the railroad company was the occupant of premises which are lands and tenements, the subject of grant, and so it was liable to assessment for the laying of walks on the intersecting streets which abutted on its premises. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. City of Buffalo, 135 N. Y. Supp. 196, 198, 76 Misc. Rep. 655.

While in common parlance the word "premises" is used to signify land with its appurtenances, yet the usual meaning of the word in conveyances is the thing granted by the deed, and the term refers to the interest conveyed and not to the land itself, and the word "premises" as used in a grant of a right of way under the East River for a railroad tunnel refers to the right of way granted, and not to the soil in the bed of the river. People ex rel. Bryan v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 124 N. Y. Supp. 711, 713, 67 Misc. Rep. 508.

Vehicle

A rural mail carrier is not, while engaged in carrying and distributing mail as such in the vehicle used by him, on his own premises and place of business within Pen. Code 1911, art. 476, permitting the carrying of weapons on one's own premises or place of business. Lattimore v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 588, 590.

Building and loan associations

The law which permits building and loan associations to take a premium from its members for "priority of loan" means the privilege of obtaining a loan out of the funds of the society in advance of other members seeking a similar benefit. Citizens' Mut. Banking & Building Soc. v. Wyatt (N. J.) 59 Atl. 553, 554.

Generally speaking, the word "premium," as used in relation to building and loan associations, is the bonus which the borrowing member agrees to pay for the privilege of obtaining the money. Defendants were borrowing members of a building and loan association, and executed bonds which required them to make stipulated monthly payments; a stated part being for stock dues, another for interest, and a further sum as premium on the loans. The bond also contained a provision: "Upon final settlement with the association, it to retain as installments on said stock and interests no greater sum than the sum actually advanced with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum." The association became insolvent; defendants having made the required payments to that time. On settlement between them and its receiver under such provision of the contract, the rule of partial payments applied, and defendants were entitled to credit for the full amount of each monthly payment, whether made for dues, interest, or premium. Flinn v. Interstate Bldg. & Loan Ass'n of Atlanta, Ga., 141 Fed. 672, 677.

Rev. St. 1909, § 3389, which directs, after providing for the making of loans by building and loan companies by competitive bidding for premiums, that the by-laws of the company may dispense with bids and provide for the making of loans to members at such a rate of interest and premium as may be provided in the by-law, "such premium to be paid in gross installments." Section 3390 provides that premiums shall consist of a percentage of the amount loaned. Held that, as "installment" means a part of a greater amount and is a word only fitly used in connection with an ascertained amount, especially when qualified by "gross," and as "interest" is a certain rate per cent. of the sum loaned for the time the money is detained by the borrower, while a "bonus" or "premium" is a definite sum agreed upon which is paid in addition to interest, either in advance or by installments, the statute means that the premium referred to should be in gross, payable in installments, and it does not therefore authorize the charging of a rate per cent. for the uncertain period for which the money may be kept, so that, though such a charge be called a "bonus" in by-law authorizing it, it is without statutory authority. Holmes v. Royal Loan Ass'n, 150 S. W. 1111, 1113, 168 Mo. App. 719.

In insurance

The sum which the insured is required to pay is called the "premium." If 1,000 men, aged 20, enter into an agreement to pay each one as he dies \$1, and to provide in advance a fund therefor, which will be sufficient, and no more than sufficient, to meet the undertaking, they find that from the tables of mortality so many will die the first year, so many the second year, and so on, so that enough will have to be paid in advance that out of it there can be paid the death claims of the per cent. who will die each year, and leave enough which, placed at compound interest, will accumulate a fund sufficient to pay all the others as they die the agreed sum of \$1. The first important step in formulating the scheme is to determine that amount of money which will, when increased by interest at a given rate per annum, compounded annually, become \$1 in a given number of years—the expectancy of the duration of life of the whole class. This amount will constitute the premium. Only a certain per cent. of 1,000 insured will die the first year. Hence the whole sum that would be required to be put at interest to pay them all the full amount will not be called for. The life tables will show how many will probably die. The fraction produced by the mortality number divided by the number of insured, when multiplied by the sum to be put at interest at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for one year to produce \$1, will then represent what each will have to pay in advance in order to have in the common fund enough to pay the death claims maturing that year. This effects the insurance for one year only. Only those dying get anything. The survivors get nothing. They have been insured—have been protected against the chance of being included in the number who died. This would be called the net cost of insuring \$1 for one year. The cost of insuring \$1 for a whole life is made up by adding together the net cost of each year beginning with the age of the insured when the insurance is effected, and continuing to the end of his expectancy, which would be the net single premium for whole life. Life insurance premiums are generally paid annually, or annually for a limited number of years, instead of one premium for the whole life. This annual net premium is divided into two parts: One, to help pay death claims occurring that year, being the proportion that policy is required to contribute to pay death claims arising that year in its class; and the other is placed by the insurer at interest to the credit of a fund which shall at all times be kept equal to the net single premium that will at the age the policy holder has attained be sufficient to then effect his insurance. This fund is commonly known as the "reserve." The sum added to the net premiums to meet expenses, contingencies, and losses is called "loading" the premium, and the total sum collected is called the "gross premium." The words "dividend additions," as used in the New York statute, refer to that part or the premiums charged which was "loaded" onto the premium in excess of its share of expenses and losses sustained. Such additions, and the earnings thereon, which constitute the "surplus," must be valued and applied in buying extended insurance for lapsed policies in force three years or longer, in the same way that the "reserve" of the policy is required to be valued and applied in purchasing such extended insurance. United States Life Ins. Co. in City of New York v. Spinks (Ky.) 96 S. W. 889, 890, 892, 893, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

As interest

See Interest (On Money).

Prize synonymous

"Premiums" and "prizes" are equivalent words within the meaning of the federal statute forbidding the carriage from one state to another of any paper, etc., purporting to be or represent a chance in a lottery. U. S. v. Jefferson, 134 Fed. 299, 300.

PREMIUM SALE

Though there was but one bid for a lot at a sale under Comp. St. 1907, §§ 5197-5244, that bid being less than the decree, the sale was a premium sale within section 5223, declaring that no redemption from a premium sale shall be allowed for less than the amount of the decree, interest, and costs and subsequent taxes paid. State v. Several Parcels of Land, 121 N. W. 977, 979, 84 Neb. 719.

Laws 1903, p. 502, c. 75, § 26, is as follows: "Any person desiring to purchase any certificate of tax sale owned by the state or by any county or city, either at public or private sale, may secure an assignment thereof by paying to the county treasurer the amount due thereon, as well as all subsequent taxes and assessments on the property then delinquent: Provided, a premium sale may be purchased at public sale for less than the amount of the decree and such sale shall be subject to the provisions of section twenty-three. Such assignment shall be made by indorsement of the county treasurer in his official capacity, countersigned by the county clerk. A record shall be kept of such assignments by the county treasurer and the county clerk. The effect of such assignment shall be to vest in the assignee the same rights which would have been secured to such assignee had he been the original purchaser at the sale." Held, that the term "premium sale" as used in this act applied to such sales as are made for less than the amount of the decree. State ex rel. Saunders v. Fink, 104 N. W. 1059, 1060, 74 Neb. 641.

PREPAID

Where a person claimed a shipment as purchaser of the bill of lading issued by the initial carrier, he was not entitled to recover it in replevin from the connecting carrier in the absence of any showing except the bill of lading which did not recite the class of freight shipped, the amount of charges prepaid, or the amount of charges prepaid on account, but merely in a space headed "If charges are to be prepaid, write or stamp here 'To be prepaid,'" contained the word "Prepaid"; such instrument not being prima facie proof that the freight had been fully paid. Bramley v. Ulster & D. R. Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 854, 856, 142 App. Div. 176.

PREPARATION

See Medicinal Preparation; Pharmaceutical Preparation.

For commission of crime

Acts of "preparation" may have such proximity to the place where the intended crime is to be committed, and such connection with a purpose of present accomplishment, that they will amount to an attempt. Some acts toward the commission of the crime are too remote for the law to notice. The act need not be the one next preceding that needed to complete the crime. Preparations made at a distance from the place where the offense is to be committed are ordinarily too remote to satisfy the requirement. The preparation must be such as would be likely to end, if not extraneously interrupted, in the consummation of the crime intended. The act must be of such a character as to advance the conduct of the actor beyond the sphere of mere intent. It must reach far enough towards the accomplishment of the desired result to amount to the commencement of the consummation. The mere fact that a prisoner procured tools adapted to jail breaking did not constitute an attempt to break jail. State v. Hurley, 64 Atl. 78, 79 Vt. 28, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 118 Am. St. Rep. 934.

Under Tariff Act

The process of hermetically sealing fruit in tin cans, thus preserving it from decay until the cans are opened, constitutes "preservation," rather than "preparation"; and fruit pulp that has been cooked and subjected to such sealing process is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, as fruit "preserved * * * in its own juices," rather than under paragraph 262, 30 Stat. 171, as fruit "prepared in any manner." Habicht, Braun & Co. v. United States, 175 Fed. 1009, 1012.

Bone-size substitute, consisting of chemical starch, dextrin, magnesium chloride, and silica, which is used for stiffening the backs of fabrics, is not a "preparation fit for use as starch" under paragraph 285, Schedule G, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 173, c. 11, but is a chemical compound under paragraph 3, Schedule A, 30 Stat. 151. United States v. B. P. Ducas & Co., 149 Fed. 253, 254.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 285, 30 Stat. 173, for "preparations * * * fit for use as starch," held to include arrowroot in its starchy form. Middleton & Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 16, 80 C. C. A. 512.

The article known as "carbolineum," or "Carbolineum Avenarius," which consists of dead oil modified by the action of chlorine gas, is dutiable under the provision in paragraph 15, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 152, for "preparations of coal tar, not colors or dyes and not medicinal, not specially provided for," and is not dutiable under the provision for "chemical compounds" in paragraph 3 of said act, or free of duty as "dead or creosote oil," under paragraph 524 of said act (Free List, § 2, c. 11). Downing v. United States, 123 Fed. 1000, 1001.

Immersing olives in salt and water does not constitute a "preparation." United States v. Zucca & Co., 175 Fed. 578, 580.

PREPARE

In the absence of explanatory evidence, the item "preparing roadway" in a tax bill cannot be assumed to include the making or repairing of the concrete foundation, especially where the city for whom the contract for the work was made and whose street commissioner supervised it paid for repairing the concrete foundation. Perkinson v. Schnake, 83 S. W. 301, 302, 108 Mo. App. 255.

PREPARED

The provision in paragraph 241, Schedule G, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 170, for mushrooms "prepared or preserved," does not include mushrooms dried merely by evaporation, which are dutiable under paragraph 257 of said act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, as "vegetables in their natural state." Kraut v. United States, 139 Fed. 94, 95.

Hanks and balls of dried and salted cabbage, the salting and manipulation of which were done as a preparation, fitting the cabbage for cooking purposes, and intended to be permanent, are dutiable as vegetables "prepared or preserved," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, 30 Stat. 170, and not as vegetables in their "natural state," under paragraph 257, 30 Stat. 171. Sun Kwong On v. United States, 177 Fed. 595, 596.

While, in the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 13, 30 Stat. 152, for chalk "prepared for toilet purposes," the preparation referred to is not, perhaps, such as is necessary to make a completed toilet article, there must be advancement toward use for toilet purposes, by the admixture of flavoring or other ingredients, or otherwise; and chalk that has been merely precipitated artificially, bolted, and packed in bags is not within that provision. United States v. P. E. Anderson & Co., 175 Fed. 961, 962, 99 C. C. A. 451.

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 262, 30 Stat. 171, relating to fruits "dried, desiccated, evaporated or prepared in any manner," the scope of the expression "prepared in any manner" is not upon the rule of noscitur a sociis to be so limited as to embrace only fruits prepared by a drying process. Causse Mfg. Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 4, 6, 80 C. C. A. 461.

A provision in a tariff act laying duty on meats of all kinds "prepared or preserved" is broad enough to include not only cooked meat, all poultry and game in tins, but also goose livers prepared pate de foie gras. James P. Smith & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 462, 464.

Olives which have been immersed in salt and water for the purpose of preserving them from decay in shipment, and which had been subjected to no preparation to fit them for eating, are not "olives prepared," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 264, 30 Stat. 171. United States v. Zucca & Co., 175 Fed. 578, 579.

The process of hermetically sealing fruit in tin cans, thus preserving it from decay until the cans are opened, constitutes "preservation," rather than "preparation"; and fruit pulp that has been cooked and subjected to such sealing process is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, as fruit "preserved" * * * in its own juices," rather than under paragraph 262, 30 Stat. 171, as fruit "prepared in any manner." Habicht, Braun & Co. v. United States, 175 Fed. 1009, 1012.

Mushrooms, dried in order to preserve them and placed in hermetically sealed tins holding from 30 to 45 pounds, are within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, relating to "mushrooms prepared or preserved, in tins, jars, bottles or similar packages," rather than paragraph 257, relating to "vegetables in their natural state." Choy Chong Woh & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 879, 82 C. C. A. 608.

The slicing of vegetables solely to facilitate the natural drying operation is not sufficient to remove them from their natural state; and mushrooms cleaned, sliced, and dried in the sun are dutiable as "vegetables in their natural state," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 257, rather than as "vegetables prepared or preserved," under paragraph 241. A. Zanmati & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 880, 82 C. C. A. 626.

Cauliflowers that have been trimmed, washed, and packed in brine for preservation during transportation, and to keep them in their natural state, and that when taken out of it and washed are still in their natural state, are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 257, as "vegetables in their natural state," rather than under paragraph 241, as "vegetables prepared or preserved." United States v. Strohmeyer & Arpe Co., 167 Fed. 533, 534, 93 C. C. A. 65.

PREPENSE

The words "premeditated," "aforethought," and "preense" possess etymologically the same meaning. They are in truth the Latin and Saxon synonyms, expressing a single idea and possess in law precisely the same force. "Malice preense" has attained a broader meaning than belongs to the term "premeditated design." Cook v. State, 35 South. 665, 671, 46 Fla. 20 (quoting People v. Clark, 7 N. Y. 385).

PREPONDERANCE

See Clear Preponderance; Fair Preponderance.

"Preponderance of evidence" means that evidence which is most consistent with the truth as measured by the experience and judgment of the jury; that which accords best with reason and probability. The best test of the preponderance is where the jury believe, from all the evidence and the circumstances in the case, the truth lies. United States v. McCaskill, 200 Fed. 332, 336.

To create a "preponderance" of evidence, the evidence must overcome opposing presumptions as well as opposing evidence. Presumptions, like probabilities, are of different degrees of strength. To overcome a strong presumption requires more evidence than to overcome a weak one. To fasten upon a man a very heinous or repulsive act requires stronger proof than to fasten upon him an indifferent act, or one in accordance with his known inclinations. Troeder v. Lorsch, 150 Fed. 710, 715, 80 C. C. A. 376 (quoting and adopting definition in Decker v. Somerset Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 66 Me. 406, 408, 409, citing The Metamora, 144 Fed. 928, 941, 75 C. C. A. 576).

An instruction that the jury must be "satisfied" of the existence of a fact is erroneous, where such fact is only required to be established by a "preponderance of the evidence." Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Buchanan, 84 S. W. 1073, 1076, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 165.

An instruction that the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and that she could not recover until she showed the facts by a preponderance or a material part of the evidence, was error because not the equivalent of a "preponderance." St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 115 S. W. 953, 956, 89 Ark. 9.

An instruction that by mentioning the burden of proof and the preponderance of evidence the court means merely to briefly express the rule of law, which is that unless the evidence before you in regard to the facts necessary to a verdict in favor of plaintiff appears in your judgment more credible than the contrary evidence regarding said facts, or than the evidence of the facts mentioned in these instructions as constituting a defense to plaintiff's said claim, then your verdict should be for the defendant, is not erroneous. Stephan v. Metzger, 60 S. W. 625, 627, 95 Mo. App. 609.

"Preponderance of evidence" is the excess over the amount of testimony necessary to balance the scales; and to say that the burden of proof is upon the party simply means that he must furnish that excess before he is entitled to a verdict. Palmer v. Huston, 121 Pac. 452, 67 Wash. 210.

A juror was disqualified to sit in a murder case in which the sole defense was insanity, who stated on his voir dire that he would require overwhelming proof of insanity before acquitting on that ground; the law only requiring proof of insanity by a "preponderance" of the evidence, which may leave the mind in doubt, while "overwhelming" proof is such as is sufficient to remove every doubt from the mind. Jones v. State, 131 S. W. 572, 577, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 139.

An instruction defined the burden of proof as the duty of proving a fact by the preponderance of evidence. Preponderance of evidence was then defined to mean the greater convincing power of evidence, and was illustrated by saying that that side has furnished the preponderance of evidence which has produced evidence of greater convincing power in the minds of the jury than that produced by the other side. The instruction then stated that the party having the burden of proof might meet such burden by producing a preponderance of the evidence, and yet not lift the burden, because, although such evidence might be of slightly greater convincing power than that produced by his opponent, still his evidence might be weak, and that, to entitle him to a finding, his evidence must be such as to satisfy the minds of the jury of the truth of his contention. Held, that the instruction was not objectionable as self-contradictory, illogical, or misleading. Logeman Bros. Co. v. R. J. Preuss Co., 111 N. W. 64, 68, 131 Wis. 122.

An instruction defining "preponderance of evidence" as the "greater convincing power of evidence, that is, in the trial of a lawsuit that side had furnished the preponderance of evidence which has produced evidence of greater convincing power in the minds of the jury than that produced by the other side," was substantially correct. Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 106 N. W. 1077, 1079, 127 Wis. 273.

An instruction that the "preponderance" of evidence means the "best" evidence was not inappropriate nor objectionable as tending to mislead the jury; the term "best evidence" obviously not having been used in the technical sense. Johnstone v. Seattle, R. & S. Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 1125, 1126, 45 Wash. 154.

"Proof by a preponderance of evidence" is that state of mind in which there is felt to be a preponderance of evidence in favor of the demandant's proposition, though the application of the phrase 'preponderance of evidence' is apt to lead the judicial discussion close to the danger line of the fallacious quantitative or numerical theory of testimony." It is in the jury, who tries an issue, that the state of mind in which there is felt to be a preponderance of evidence in favor of a proposition must exist; and it must necessarily be the result of the consideration and weight given by the jury to the testimony. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Higdon (Tex.) 123 S. W. 732, 736 (quoting 4 Wig. Ev. § 2498).

Direct or circumstantial

Whether a fact is established by a "preponderance of the evidence" is not determined alone by the fact that the affirmative evidence may be direct, while the negative evidence may be circumstantial. Fountain v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, 117 Pac. 630, 634.

Number of witnesses

"Preponderance of the evidence" is not necessarily determined by the number of witnesses. Culbert v. Wilmington & P. Traction Co. (Del.) 82 Atl. 1081, 1083; Fountain v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford (Cal.) 117 P. 630, 634; Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 72 N. E. 571, 573, 574, 163 Ind. 518; Marcotte v. Sheridan, 91 N. Y. Supp. 744; Atoka Coal & Mining Co. v. Miller, 104 S. W. 555, 564, 7 Ind. T. 104; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Johnson (Tex.) 103 S. W. 239, 242 (citing Alcorn v. Powell (Ky.) 60 S. W. 520).

An instruction defining "preponderance of evidence" as that most satisfactory to the minds of the jurors which should not be determined by the number of witnesses on each side, but solely from what the jurors think the evidence shows to be the truth, although a departure from the general definition, is not misleading or erroneous. Thurman v. Miller, 98 N. E. 879, 380, 50 Ind. App. 372.

The "preponderance of evidence" may not be determined by the number of witnesses, but by the greater weight of all the evidence, and the greater weight does not necessarily mean a greater number of witnesses, but the opportunity for knowledge, the information possessed, and the manner of testifying must be considered to determine the "weight" of testimony. Garver v. Garver, 121 Pac. 165, 166, 52 Colo. 227, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 674.

Saying, in defining "a fair preponderance of the evidence," that it is such evidence as "produces conviction in your mind," is not so prejudicial as to warrant reversal; the court further saying that it means "not the number of witnesses, but the most credible evidence; that which satisfied the minds, the minds as jurors." Shaw v. Woodland Shingle Co., 111 Pac. 1070, 1072, 61 Wash. 56.

"Preponderance of evidence" is not necessarily determined by the number of witnesses for or against a proposition, although, other things being equal, it may be so determined. Wilkinson v. Anderson-Taylor Co., 79 Pac. 46, 47, 28 Utah, 346.

Proof by a "preponderance of evidence" means proof inducing that state of mind in which there is felt to be a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the proposition, and the number of witnesses or quantity of the evidence is not the test in determining where lies the preponderance; the personal element behind the testimony which induces the state of mind in the trier of facts being the controlling consideration. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Higdon (Tex.) 123 S. W. 732, 736.

"Preponderance of the evidence" means the greater weight of the evidence. In determining this, the jury are bound to consider the number of witnesses as well as the quality of the evidence for the purpose of determining where the truth lies. Dupuis v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co., 109 N. W. 413, 415, 146 Mich. 151.

The "preponderance of the evidence" does not depend upon the number of witnesses. It does depend upon the weight and credibility that should be given to the respective witnesses. Any number of witnesses may be of equal credibility and possess equal information, and still differ greatly in the amount or weight of their evidence. The authorities generally affirm that the number of witnesses are not to be counted by the jury or court trying the case in order to determine upon which side is the preponderance; but the evidence given by them is to be weighed, and the preponderance thereof does not depend on the greater number of the witnesses in the particular case. This rule is specially applicable to the case of ex parte affidavits, where there is a direct conflict as to time, facts, and circumstances material and relevant to the issues presented, and especially is it true in a case when more or less of the alleged facts are stated on both sides upon hearsay, information, or belief. Ford v. Taylor, 140 Fed. 356, 360 (citing Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 72 N. E. 571, 574, 163 Ind. 518).

"Preponderance of testimony" does not mean necessarily any class of testimony or any kind of evidence, or the number of witnesses, but it means that testimony which satisfies the jury of the very right of the case. Hogan v. Detroit United Ry., 103 N. W. 543, 544, 140 Mich. 101.

An instruction that by a "preponderance of the evidence" is meant the greater weight or value of the same, "and necessarily the greater number of witnesses," was erroneous. Heald v. Western Union Tel. Co., 105 N. W. 588, 129 Iowa, 326.

Weight of evidence

"Preponderance of evidence" means the greater weight of evidence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 73 S. W. 79, 82, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 503; Ewen v. Wilbor, 70 N. E. 575, 578, 208 Ill. 492; Wilkinson v. Anderson-Taylor Co., 79 Pac. 46, 47, 28 Utah, 346; Nickey v. Steuder, 73 N. E. 117, 119, 164 Ind. 189; Woods v. Latta, 88 Pac. 402, 404, 35 Mont. 9; Roberge v. Bonner, 77 N. E. 1023, 1024, 185 N. Y. 265; John Ainsfield Co. v. Rasmussen, 85 Pac. 1002, 1003, 30 Utah, 453; State v. Paulsgrove, 101 S. W. 27, 30, 203 Mo. 193; Hickey v. Rio Grande Western R. Co., 82 Pac. 29, 35, 29 Utah, 392; Gansey v. Orr, 73 S. W. 477, 480, 173 Mo. 532; Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Jay, 109 S. W. 1116, 1120, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 165 (citing Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 73 S. W. 79, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 503).

The term "preponderance of the evidence" means the greater weight of the credible testimony. Archambault v. Blanchard, 95 S. W. 834, 846, 198 Mo. 384; Rutledge & Kilpatrick Realty Co. v. Gartside, 106 S. W. 1126, 1130, 128 Mo. App. 580.

By a "preponderance of the evidence" is meant the weight of the testimony, when properly considered. Culbert v. Wilmington & P. Traction Co. (Del.) 82 Atl. 1081, 1083.

By "preponderance of evidence" is meant that evidence which, after a consideration of all the evidence, is in the judgment of the jurors entitled to the greatest weight; that the testimony which points to a certain conclusion appears to the jury to be more credible and probable than the testimony to the contrary. It means such evidence as, when weighed with that which opposes it, has more convincing force, and from which it results that the greater probability is in favor of the party upon whom the burden rests. United States v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 Fed. 459, 462.

The "preponderance of evidence" depends on the weight of evidence and means the greater weight of evidence. "Preponderance of evidence" is defined in Bouv. Law Dict. vol. 2, p. 730, to be "the greater weight of evidence or evidence which is more credible and convincing to the mind." Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 72 N. E. 571, 573, 574, 163 Ind. 518.

A charge that "by 'preponderance of evidence' is meant that superior weight of evidence, upon the issues involved, which, while it may not be sufficient to convince the mind beyond a reasonable doubt, is yet sufficient to incline a fair and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than to the other" is a substantial definition of the term "preponderance of evidence," as defined in Civ. Code 1895, § 5145. Scott v. Brown, 56 S. E. 130, 127 Ga. 88.

An instruction that by the word "preponderance" is meant a greater weight of evidence, or evidence which is more credible and convincing to the mind, is correct. Krup v. Corley, 69 S. W. 609, 610, 95 Mo. App. 640.

"Preponderance of evidence" and "burden of proof" are not the same thing, although they run into each other. By "preponderance of evidence" is meant the evidence which possesses greater weight or convincing power; by "burden of proof" is meant the duty resting on the party having the affirmative of the issue to satisfy or convince the minds of the jury, by the preponderance of the evidence, of the truth of his contention. It is not enough that his evidence is of slightly greater weight or convincing power; it must go further and satisfy the minds of the jury before the "burden of proof" is discharged. Elchmann v. Buchheit, 107 N. W. 325, 326, 128 Wis. 385 (citing Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 106 N. W. 1077, 127 Wis. 273).

An instruction: "By preponderance of the evidence is not necessarily meant a greater number of witnesses, but only such weight of evidence as satisfies the jury of the truth of the allegation to be established"—is sufficient, though Code Civ. Proc. § 1835, provides that only evidence which satisfies the "unprejudiced" mind will justify a verdict. McVay v. Central California Inv. Co., 91 Pac. 745, 747, 6 Cal. App. 184.

The term "preponderance of evidence" suggests the quality of outweighing in convincing power. It means preponderance in the convincing power of the evidence. In the orderly way of determining the truth from evidence, the jury first consider the same and determine on which side of the dispute there is a greater weight thereof; the more convincing indications as to where the truth lies. They next determine whether such greater indications are sufficiently convincing to satisfy them of the truth of the matter, not beyond a reasonable doubt, for no such degree of certainty in civil cases is required, nor merely as to what the "preponderance of the evidence" tends to prove, for that degree of certainty leaves the truth of the matter possibly not more than suggested; the mind being far from satisfied as to the real truth, but satisfied of the truth to a reasonable certainty. Grotjan v. Rice, 102 N. W. 551, 553, 124 Wis. 253.

The slightest difference in the weight of the evidence is a "preponderance," and justifies the jury in returning a verdict in favor of the party in whose favor such preponderance exists. Hammond, W. & E. C. Electric Ry. Co. v. Antonia, 83 N. E. 766, 769, 41 Ind. App. 335.

An instruction that "by a 'preponderance of the evidence' is meant greater weight of the evidence as viewed by you after a careful consideration of all of the evidence introduced in the case" is correct so far as it goes. Parkins v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 93 N. W. 197, 199, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 1.

An instruction that the burden was on plaintiff to establish each and every particular fact necessary to prove his cause of action by a "preponderance of the evidence," that by the "preponderance of the evidence" was meant that greater and superior weight of the testimony which reasonably satisfied the jurors' minds, that it was not to be determined alone by the number of witnesses, but that it might occur that the statement or superior knowledge of the subject-matter testified to, of one or a few witnesses, might be of more importance and be relied upon with a greater degree of assurance than that of a greater number, and that the testimony of witnesses was strengthened or weakened by other facts or considerations disclosed by the evidence, was not erroneous. The use of the expression "reasonably satisfies," while not to be commended, must have been understood by the jury as meaning that a preponderance was established if the result of the evidence was to reasonably satisfy their minds that the greater weight was with the plaintiff, and not as meaning that they must be reasonably satisfied of the truth of the matters alleged. Ball v. Marquis, 98 N. W. 496, 497, 122 Iowa, 665.

The phrase "preponderance of the evidence," in the statement that a plaintiff must establish his case by a "preponderance of the evidence," means that he must have more evidence, weightier evidence, than defendant, but does not mean that his case shall be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Atoka Coal & Mining Co. v. Miller, 104 S. W. 555, 564, 7 Ind. T. 104.

By a "preponderance of the evidence" is meant that the testimony adduced by one side is more credible and conclusive than that of the other, and that it sufficiently outweighs the opposing evidence to satisfy the jury that a certain fact is true rather than the reverse. Cartlich v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 108 S. W. 584, 587, 129 Mo. App. 721.

As expressly defined by Civ. Code, §§ 5144, 5145, a "preponderance of the evidence" is that superior weight of evidence which, while not enough to wholly free the mind from a reasonable doubt, is sufficient to incline a reasonable and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than the other. Jones v. McElroy, 68 S. E. 729, 730, 134 Ga. 857, 137 Am. St. Rep. 276.

The term "preponderance of the evidence," in the rule that the findings of a referee must be affirmed by the trial court unless they are against the clear preponderance of the evidence, requires the overbalancing weight of the evidence to be so apparent as to manifestly outweigh any probable legitimate inference resulting from advantages of the referee for discovering the truth, which the reviewing tribunal cannot have. Wojahn v. National Union Bank of Oshkosh, 129 N. W. 1068, 1074, 144 Wis. 646.

An instruction that "preponderance of proof" means that the jury are persuaded of the soundness of the claim more satisfactorily than the contrary was not objectionable in not employing the word "weigh," nor as implying that the jury might be persuaded by argument rather than proof, as the jury could understand the term "persuaded" only to mean that the proof must be more persuasive and convincing. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Kountz, 168 Fed. 832, 839, 94 C. C. A. 244.

In civil cases the burden of proof may be carried by means of a preponderance of the evidence, which is that superior weight of evidence upon the issues involved which is sufficient to incline a reasonable and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than to the other. It is not required to be sufficient to wholly free the mind from a reasonable doubt. Accordingly it is not proper in a civil case to instruct the jury that the party on whom rests the burden of proof must establish his contention to a reasonable and moral certainty. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Stiles, 76 S. E. 570, 571, 139 Ga. 49.

The judge charged: "By a 'preponderance of the testimony' is meant that superior weight of the evidence upon the issues in the case, which, while not enough to wholly free the mind from a reasonable doubt, is yet sufficient to incline the reasonable and impartial minds of the jury to one side of the issue rather than to the other. The burden is upon the defendant in this case to make out his case under the rule of law just given you, and in the cross-bill filed by the defendant the burden is upon him, the defendant, to make out against the plaintiff under the same rule of law the contentions set out therein." Held: (a) It clearly appears from the context that the use of the word "defendant" was a mere slip of the tongue, and that the word "plaintiff" was intended to be used. (b) The judge elsewhere charged: "A parol contract for land should be so clearly, strongly, and satisfactorily shown and proven as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the agreement or contract." In the light of the entire charge, that portion of it copied above, on which error was assigned, affords no cause for a new trial. Becker v. Donaldson, 75 S. E. 1122, 1126, 138 Ga. 634.

PRESBYTERIANS

PRESBYTERIANISM

The name "Presbyterianism" indicates primarily a system of church government through chosen representatives, consisting of the church session as the governing body in each congregation, and a presbytery consisting of all the ministers, in number not less than five, and one ruling elder from each congregation, within a certain district, and a synod embracing at least three presbyteries, and consisting of ministers and ruling elders from the local churches, and the General Assembly, which is a representative body composed of ministers and ruling elders selected by each of the presbyteries, and the name also indicates a doctrine commonly known as "Calvinism." Ramsey v. Hicks, 91 N. E. 344, 346, 174 Ind. 428, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665.

PRESBYTERY

The constitution of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and its Confession of faith, § 29, provides that a "presbytery" consists of all the ordained ministers and one ruling elder from each church within a certain district. Clark v. Brown (Tex.) 108 S. W. 1186.

The constitution of the Presbyterian Church creates certain church courts. It declares that the government of the church is to be exercised in some certain and definite form, and by various courts, in regular gradation. These courts are denominated "church sessions," "presbyteries," "synods," and the "general assembly." The jurisdiction of each of these courts is defined in the constitution. The church session has jurisdiction of a single church; the presbytery has jurisdiction over the church session and jurisdiction within a prescribed district; the synod has jurisdiction over three or more presbyteries; and the general assembly has jurisdiction over such matters as concern the whole church. Every court is declared to have the right to resolve questions of doctrine and discipline seriously and reasonably proposed; and, although each court exercises exclusive and original jurisdiction over all matters especially belonging to it, the lower courts are subject to the review and control of the higher courts, in regular gradation. The general assembly has jurisdiction to review and decide all references and complaints regularly brought before it from the inferior courts, and to decide all questions respecting doctrine and discipline, and "to receive, under its jurisdiction, other ecclesiastical bodies whose organization is conformed to the doctrine and order of the church." So far as any controversies in reference to doctrine are concerned, by the very terms of the constitution the general assembly is made the highest court, and, of course, its judgment on the matter is final and conclusive. The general assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, hence, has jurisdiction to determine whether the matter in controversy is within its jurisdiction, and also to determine the controversy itself. Mack v. Kime, 58 S. E. 184, 195, 129 Ga. 1, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675.

PRESCRIBE

See As Prescribed.

The word "prescribed" has a well-defined legal meaning, denoting to lay down authoritatively as a guide, direction, or rule; to impose as a peremptory order; to dictate; to point; to direct; to give as a guide, direction, or rule of action; to give law. Loewy v. Gordon, 114 N. Y. Supp. 211, 212, 129 App. Div. 459; People ex rel. McDermott v. Board of Estimate & Apportionment of City of New York, 131 N. Y. Supp. 604, 605, 146 App. Div. 515; Heiferman v. Scholder, 119 N. Y. Supp. 520, 523, 134 App. Div. 579.

Acts Sp. Sess. 1909, p. 316, § 25, provides that for a court "established for and held" in a territorial division of a county only the names of jurors residing in that territory shall be placed in the jury box and drawn. Act Feb. 23, 1907 (Loc. Acts 1907, p. 61) divides St. Clair county into two judicial divisions, and provides for the holding of terms of court in each division, with a branch clerk's office and sheriff's office in the division established by the act, and with process returnable to it, and that all criminal cases in the county shall be tried in the judicial division where the offenses were committed. Held, that the word "established" is not limited to the meaning of "to found" or "set up," but often means putting in a settled or efficient state an existing legal organization or institution, and is often synonymous with "prescribed"; that the act of 1907 "established" a court to be held in a territorial subdivision of the county, within the meaning of section 25, though the two courts exercised exclusive jurisdiction within their respective divisions and together constituted the circuit court of the county, and hence that the jury for the new division should be drawn under the provisions of section 25. Shell v. State, 56 South. 39, 42, 2 Ala. App. 207.

"Legislative power," within Const. art. 4, § 1, providing that the legislative power shall be vested in the General Assembly, is the power to make laws; a "law" is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power of a state; a "rule" is distinguished from whim, caprice, compact, agreement, or discretion, and "prescribed" means that the rule shall be manifested and published, so as to be known as a rule of civil conduct. Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis v. Knott, 111 S. W. 565, 571, 212 Mo. 616.

As direct as a remedy

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4075, giving the privilege of secrecy to all information acquired by a physician from a patient in attending the patient professionally, necessary to enable the physician to prescribe for such patient, the words "necessary" and "prescribe" are not to receive any technical or unduly restricted meaning, and, in a proceeding contesting the probate of an alleged will of decedent, the testimony and opinion of decedent's attending physician as to her mental capacity, based entirely on information derived from her statements or the physician's observation while treating her professionally and for the purpose of such treatment, are properly excluded. In re Hunt's Will, 100 N. W. 874, 876, 122 Wis. 460.

In medicine to "prescribe" remedies is defined to be "to write or to give medical directions; to indicate remedies." It is not necessary that such prescription should be in writing. It may be given or indicated verbally. Any direction given to the patient for drugs, medicines, or other remedies, for the cure of bodily diseases, directing how they are to be applied to, or used by, the patient, is a prescription, within Rev. Code 1852, amended in 1893, p. 58, c. 7. It would make no difference whether the direction was given by the person in charge of the patient himself or by another person, even though he be a licensed physician engaged by and under the control and direction of the person in charge in that particular. State v. Paul, 76 N. W. 861, 56 Neb. 369; State v. Lawson (Del.) 69 Atl. 1066, 1067, 6 Pennewill, 395.

A person treating patients by hypnotism and massage does not engage in the business of prescribing remedies for the cure of bodily disease, within Rev. Code 1852, amended in 1893, p. 58, c. 7, requiring every person, whose business it is to "prescribe" remedies for the cure of bodily disease, to obtain a license, unless the treatment is accompanied by directions as to the use by the patients of drugs, medicines, or other remedies. State v. Lawson (Del.) 65 Atl. 593.

Under the statute making it a misdemeanor for any person to engage in practicing medicine without having first obtained a license, and providing (Rev. Code 1852, as amended in 1893, p. 58, c. 117) that every person (except apothecaries) whose business it is for fee and reward to prescribe remedies or perform surgical operations shall be deemed a physician within the act, it is not necessary that the prescription shall be in writing, and any direction given to the patient for drugs, medicines, or other remedies for the cure of bodily diseases, directing how they are to be applied to or used by the patient, is prescribing remedies within the meaning of the statute, to "prescribe remedies" meaning, in medicine, "to write or to give medical directions, or to indicate remedies"; and it is immaterial whether the direction is given by the defendant himself or by another person, even though such other person be a licensed physician, but engaged by and acting under the direction of defendant in the conduct of his business. State v. Lawson (Del.) 69 Atl. 1066, 1067, 6 Pennewill, 395.

Where, in a prosecution for administering or "prescribing" medicine to a pregnant woman to produce an abortion, it was proved that defendant furnished medicine to her, and gave her directions with reference to taking it, he was properly convicted of "administering or prescribing" medicine or drugs to prosecutrix, etc., prohibited by Sand. & H. Dig. § 1459, though he was not present when the medicine was delivered to prosecutrix or taken. According to the Century Dictionary, "prescribe" means "to advise, appoint, or designate as a remedy for disease; to give medical directions; designate the remedies to be used; as to prescribe for a patient in a fever"—and according to Webster's Dictionary the term, as applied to medicine, means "to write or give medical directions; to indicate remedies; as to prescribe for a patient in a fever." Burris v. State, 84 S. W. 723, 724, 73 Ark. 453 (citing McCaughy v. State, 59 N. E. 169, 156 Ind. 41).

One who caters to the patronage of the sick, who ask relief from their ills and assures them of her ability to help them, and supplies them with her alleged appropriate remedies, giving instructions for their application or use, would seem to come within the ordinary and usual signification attached to the words "prescribing and furnishing medicines." State v. Breese, 114 N. W. 45, 47, 137 Iowa, 673, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

PREScribed BY LAW OR ORDINANCE

See Specially Prescribed by Law.

The term "prescribed by law," as used in Const. 1846, art. 5, § 6, describing the duties of the officers mentioned, which provision has been re-enacted in each Constitution since 1846, means prescribed by some statute of the state, and does not include matters required by common law. People v. Santa Clara Lumber Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 624, 626, 55 Misc. Rep. 507.

Rev. Code, City of Chicago, § 1477, relating to the police department of cities, declares that the department shall embrace as many patrolmen "as has been or may be prescribed by ordinance." Held, that the word "prescribed" as there used is equivalent to "established." Bullis v. City of Chicago, 85 N. E. 614, 617, 235 Ill. 472.

PRESCRIPTION

Prescribe as direct as a remedy, see Prescribe.

A physician's "prescription" which does not state that intoxicating liquor prescribed is a necessary remedy is not a prescription within a statute prohibiting the sale of liquors by pharmacists, except on a prescription stating that such liquor is "prescribed as a necessary remedy," although it contains the letters "P. N. R." State v. Manning, 81 S. W. 223, 225, 107 Mo. App. 51.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3050, makes any physician who shall issue a "prescription" for intoxicating liquor to be used otherwise than for medicinal purposes guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 3047 forbids a druggist to sell intoxicating liquor in any quantity of less than four gallons, except on a written prescription from some physician, stating the name of the person for whom prescribed, and that such intoxicating liquor is prescribed as a necessary remedy. Held, that a prescription issued by a physician "for one quart of whisky" dated and signed by him, was not a prescription within section 3047, and was not even good as a written order for intoxicating liquor, and hence, furnishing no authority to a druggist to sell intoxicating liquor, the issuance thereof was not a violation of section 3050. State v. Davis, 108 S. W. 127, 128, 129 Mo. App. 129.

PREScription (In Law)

See Presumptive Grant; Title by Limitation or Prescription.

"So far, therefore, as the title to property is concerned, or, at all events, so far as the title to real property is concerned, 'prescription' and 'limitation' are convertible terms, and a plea of the proper statute of limitations is a good plea of prescriptive right." Wutchumna Water Co. v. Ragle, 84 Pac. 162, 164, 148 Cal. 759.

The term "limitations," as used in statutes of this country relating to adverse possession, is merely synonymous with the word "prescription," used in the Roman law, and means the time prescribed by statute within which a title to property may be acquired by adverse possession. Brock v. Kirkpatrick, 48 S. E. 72, 79, 69 S. C. 231 (citing Tyler, Eject. p. 88).

Adverse possession distinguished

See Adverse Possession.

As applicable to private right of way

"Granting that the act of 1872 changed the common law in making more liberal provisions for the acquisition of a private way 'prescription,' we fail utterly to see how it can be said to follow that the prescriptive right, when once acquired as provided by the statute, is any less complete than it would have been if obtained under the more rigid requirements of the common law. Prescription is prescription, whether it be acquired at common law or by statute." Nugent v. Watkins, 52 S. E. 158, 159, 124 Ga. 150.

Elements of prescription

Long user is the essential element of "prescription." Davis v. Town of Bonaparte, 114 N. W. 896, 898, 137 Iowa, 196.

One claiming title by "prescription" must show uninterrupted, open possession, under a claim of ownership, for 80 years. Brewer v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 54 South. 987, 992, 128 La. 544.

The foundation of "prescription" rests upon an adverse, continuous, uninterrupted use, of such nature as to impart notice to the owner for such a period of time as would raise a presumption of grant. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Cuneo, 108 S. W. 714, 715, 717, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 622.

"Adverse possession" and "prescription" are closely related. The one is regulated by statute and the other by common law which has adopted 20 years as the prescriptive period from analogy to the statute of limitations. "Adverse possession" is the open and hostile possession of land under claim of title to the exclusion of the true owner, which, if continued for 20 years, ripens into an actual title. "Prescription" is measured by user, and the adverse use must commence the same way, continue for the same period, and be of the same character as the adverse possession required to give to the real estate. The close connection between the two methods of acquiring property makes it reasonable and natural to extend the analogy to the subject of disability. Muller v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 454, 456, 53 Misc. Rep. 133 (quoting Scallion v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 78 N. E. 284, 285, 185 N. Y. 359, 363, 7 Ann. Cas. 168).

"To acquire a right by 'prescription,' there must be an actual enjoyment. Prescription acquires for the party precisely what he has possessed, and nothing more, and in proving a prescription the user of the right is the only evidence of the extent to which it has been acquired. The use and enjoyment of what is claimed must have been adverse, under a claim of right, exclusive, continuous, uninterrupted, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the estate, in, over, or out of which the easement prescribed for is claimed, and while such owner was able in law to assert and enforce his rights, and to resist such adverse claim, if not well founded." McCasin v. State, 75 N. E. 844, 845, 38 Ind. App. 184 (quoting and adopting definition in Peterson v. McCullough, 50 Ind. 35).

A fee-simple title to real estate by "prescription" may be acquired by open, notorious, adverse, and continuous possession, upon claim of title for the length of time provided by Mansf. Dig. Ark. § 4471 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 2938). Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Rice, 104 S. W. 819, 821, 7 Ind. T. 514.

"Prescription" is a title acquired by use and time and allowed by law, three things being necessary to establish the right, viz. use and occupation or enjoyment, identity of the thing enjoyed and that it should be by claim adverse to the rights of some other person. Rice v. Wade, 111 S. W. 594, 596, 131 Mo. App. 338.

"Dedication" and "prescription" are distinguishable in that "dedication" is established by proof of an act of dedication, and an intent to dedicate without reference to the period of public use while long user is an essential element of "prescription." Davis v. Town of Bonaparte, 114 N. W. 896, 898, 137 Iowa, 196.

"'Prescription' * * * is measured by user, and the adverse use must commence in the same way, continue for the same period, and be of the same character as the adverse possession required to give title to real estate." Scallion v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 78 N. E. 284, 285, 185 N. Y. 359, 7 Ann. Cas. 168.

In order to obtain a right by "prescription," it is necessary that during the prescriptive period an action could have been maintained by the party against whom the claim was made, and a right of prescription is limited by the character and extent of the user during the period requisite to acquire

The elements essential to a "prescriptive right" or "prescription" to the use of an irrigating ditch are that the user by claimant during the irrigation season be actual, open, and notorious; that it be hostile; that it be under claim of title; that it be continuous and uninterrupted for five years; and that the right must have been asserted with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner and permitted to the commencement of the action. Silva v. Hawn, 102 Pac. 952, 955, 10 Cal. App. 544 (citing and adopting De Frieze v. Quint, 30 Pac. 1, 94 Cal. 653, 28 Am. St. Rep. 151; Strong v. Baldwin, 70 Pac. 288, 137 Cal. 438; Hesperia Land & Water Co. v. Rogers, 23 Pac. 196, 83 Cal. 10, 17 Am. St. Rep. 209; Franz v. Mendonca, 63 Pac. 361, 131 Cal. 205; Id., 80 Pac. 1078, 146 Cal. 640).

"The acts by which it is sought to establish the 'prescriptive right' must be such as to operate as an invasion of the right of the person against whom the prescriptive right is asserted, and will give cause of action in his favor. No adverse user can be initiated until the owners of the superior right are deprived of the benefit of its use in such a substantial manner as to notify them that their rights are being invaded." Watts v. Spencer, 94 Pac. 39, 43, 51 Or. 262 (citing Long, Irr. § 90; Wimer v. Simmons, 39 Pac. 6, 27 Or. 1, 50 Am. St. Rep. 685; North Powder Co. v. Coughanour, 54 Pac. 546, 34 Or. 9; Bowman v. Bowman, 57 Pac. 548, 35 Or. 279; Boyce v. Cupper, 61 Pac. 642, 37 Or. 256).

A "prescriptive right" to an easement in another man's land is the adverse and uninterrupted enjoyment of it for 20 years under a claim of right without payment of damages and without the consent of the owner; but the overflowing of another's land by the owner of a mill to work it by means of a dam, the mill and dam standing on his own land, being secured by the mill act (Rev. St. c. 94) his common-law remedy for damages is taken away, and the landowner can recover against the owner of the mill only as provided in the mill act. Foster v. Sebago Imp. Co., 60 Atl. 894-896, 100 Me. 196.

"To establish a highway by 'prescription' there must be a continuous user by the public, under a claim of right distinctly manifest by some appropriate act on the part of the public authorities, for a period equal to that required to bar an action for recovery of title land. To establish the existence of a legal public road over the premises of a private person by user alone, it must appear that the user was with the knowledge of the owner." Kansas City & O. R. Co. v. State, 105 N. W. 713, 714, 74 Neb. 868 (citing Lewis v. City of Lincoln, 75 N. W. 154, 55 Neb. 1; Graham v. Hartnett, 7 N. W. 280, 10 Neb. 517).

In order that a way may be established by "prescription," the use and enjoyment thereof must have been adverse, under a claim of right, exclusive, uninterrupted, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land in or over which the easement is claimed for the period of 20 years. A mere permissive use never ripens into a prescriptive right. It must appear the use was enjoyed under such circumstances as to indicate that it was claimed as a right, and was not regarded by the parties as a mere privilege or license, revocable at the pleasure of the owner. Where a railroad company constructed a bridge over a sluiceway, and an adjoining property owner, whose farm was divided by the railroad right of way, used the sluice as a passage for cattle under the railroad track for a period equal to the statutory period of limitation, but there was nothing to show that such use was adverse to the rights of the railroad company, and not permissive, the landowner acquired no prescriptive easement in the use of the way. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Ives, 66 N. E. 940, 202 Ill. 69 (citing Rose v. City of Farmington, 63 N. E. 631, 196 Ill. 226; Dexter v. Tree, 6 N. E. 506, 117 Ill. 532).

To establish a street by "prescription," the use and enjoyment of the land claimed as a street must have been adverse under a claim of right, exclusive, continuous, uninterrupted, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner. City of Princeton v. Gustavson, 89 N. E. 653, 655, 241 Ill. 566.

"The four essential facts for the plaintiffs to prove in order to sustain their claim to an 'easement by prescription' are: First, user for the prescribed period; second, that the user was adverse; third, that it was under a claim of right; fourth, notice to the owner of the user, and of its character and of the claims of right." Anthony v. Kennard Bldg. Co., 87 S. W. 921, 924, 188 Mo. 704.

In order to acquire an "easement by prescription," the adverse user must not only be continuous in point of time but also substantially identical during the whole statutory period with respect to manner and extent. One seeking to acquire an easement of maintaining a ditch over land by adverse user must maintain it without material change of location for the full statutory period. Dunn v. Thomas, 96 N. W. 142, 143, 69 Neb. 683.

To acquire an "easement" in the land of another under the common law, the use must have been continued from a time when the memory of man ran not to the contrary. Wasmund v. Harm, 78 Pac. 777, 778, 36 Wash. 170.

Grant presumed

"'Prescription' rests on the presumption of a grant, which has been lost by process of time. No prescription can have legal origin where no grant could have been made to support it." Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1072, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 732.

"Prescription" rests upon the presumption of a grant of incorporeal rights that has become lost, and after the lapse of 20 years the presumption ripens into a title. Muller v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 454, 456, 53 Misc. Rep. 133; Scallon v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 78 N. E. 284, 285, 185 N. Y. 359, 7 Ann. Cas. 168.

PRESENCE

See Constructive Presence; Signed, Sealed, and Delivered in the Presence of.

Actual presence of principal, see Principal.

Engaged in service requiring his presence, see Engaged.

Where a person fires a pistol in a village, behind a cold drink stand within 100 yards of an officer's residence, it may fairly be said that the pistol was fired in the "presence" of the officer, and is an offense, under section 3626, Gen. St. 1906, for which an officer may arrest the person firing the pistol, without warrant. Carlton v. State, 58 South. 486, 489, 63 Fla. 1.

The words "in the presence," in the statute authorizing a peace officer to arrest without a warrant when a public offense is committed "in his presence," means in the sight of, or that the act is done in such manner that the officer can detect it by sight or hearing as the act of accused, and the fact that an officer is within seeing and hearing distance of a criminal act is not sufficient to make it in his presence. Brown v. Wallis (Tex.) 101 S. W. 1068, 1070 (citing Hughes v. Commonwealth [Ky.] 41 S. W. 296).

The phrase "in the presence of a female," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 396, making a person who shall use obscene and vulgar language in the presence of a female guilty of a misdemeanor, means "within range of the female's hearing." Holcombe v. State, 62 S. E. 647, 650, 5 Ga. App. 47.

The words, "in his presence," as used in Pen. Code 1910, § 917, authorizing an officer to arrest without a warrant if the offense is committed in his presence, and the words "within his immediate knowledge," as used in section 921, authorizing a private person to arrest where the offense is committed in his presence or within his knowledge, are synonymous. Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 72 S. E. 51, 55, 9 Ga. App. 672.

Under the rule that an officer may arrest for offenses committed in his presence, the expression "in his presence" does not necessarily mean in his sight. Pen. Code 1895, § 396, is applicable alike to state and municipal arresting officers. If an offender against a municipal ordinance is endeavoring to escape from justice, the marshal or policeman may lawfully arrest him without a warrant whilst so endeavoring to escape. But where it is not shown that the person attempted to be arrested by the marshal had violated any ordinance of the town, other than by proof of a verbal complaint made to the officer by another that the person sought to be arrested had created a disturbance, and he eluded the officer to prevent an illegal arrest, his avoidance of the officer by flight is not such an endeavor to escape as would justify his arrest without a warrant. Porter v. State, 52 S. E. 283, 288, 124 Ga. 297, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730.

PRESENCE OF THE TESTATOR

The phrase "in the presence of" is the statement of a function of a subscribing witness. In re Ellery, 123 N. Y. Supp. 1015, 1017, 139 App. Div. 244.

Ability to see

A signing by attesting witnesses is in the "presence of testator" if he is in a position where he might see them attest. In re Bowling's Will, 64 S. E. 368, 370, 150 N. C. 507.

The attestation of a will to be in the presence of testator within the statute must take place within the uninterrupted range of testator's vision, the "presence" of testator meaning contiguity, with such an uninterrupted view between himself and the subscribing witnesses that he could see the act of attestation, whether in the same room or in an adjoining room. Schofield v. Thomas, 86 N. E. 122, 124, 236 Ill. 417.

Where the witnesses to testatrix's will signed in the same room with her, and at a table which she could have reached with her hand from where she was sitting, and where she could have seen them sign by merely turning her head, the witnesses signed in her "presence," under the rule that it is not necessary that testatrix should actually see the witnesses sign, but it is sufficient if they sign at a place within the scope of her vision, and where, considering her position and the state of her health at the time, she might have seen the signing, had she so desired. Ellis v. Flannigan, 97 N. E. 696, 697, 253 Ill. 397.

Conscious presence

"The authorities have always given the word 'presence' the meaning of conscious presence, so that the act of attestation may be within the actual personal knowledge of the testator. * * * It is not necessary that the act of attestation be performed in the same room, if it takes place within the testator's range of vision, where he can see the signing, considering his position and the state of his health at the time. It is still in his presence although he may turn and look away or choose not to look at the act. On the other hand, no mere contiguity of the witnesses will constitute presence, if the position of the testator is such that he cannot possibly see them sign. An attestation is not in the presence of the testator, although the witnesses are in the same room and close to him, if some material obstacle prevents him from knowing of his own knowledge, or perceiving by his senses, the act of attestation." Calkins v. Calkins, 75 N. E. 182, 183, 216 Ill. 458, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393, 108 Am. St. Rep. 233 (citing Witt v. Gardiner, 41 N. E. 731, 158 Ill. 176, 49 Am. St. Rep. 150).

PRESENT — PRESENTED — PRESENTATION

See Special Presentation.

Of an indictment

An indictment is "presented" when it is delivered by the foreman, in the presence of the grand jury, to the court, and filed with the clerk. Shivers v. Territory, 74 Pac. 899, 901, 13 Okl. 466.

The term "presented by the grand jury," as used in Pen. Code, § 758, providing that accusations against municipal officers for misconduct may be presented by the grand jury, does not mean the body in its entirety, but that such accusation may be presented by 12 members of the jury, as the common law governs; the statute being silent as to the number that may present such accusation. Coffey v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 83 Pac. 580, 581, 2 Cal. App. 453.

Of claim against a city

The commencement within six months of a suit against a city for water damages, caused by a street embankment and grade, was a sufficient presentation of the claim, within Code 1907, § 1191, providing that claims against municipalities for damages growing out of torts shall be "presented" for payment within six months after their accrual, or be barred. Anderson v. City of Birmingham (Ala.) 58 South. 256, 257.

Of claim against a county

Under Code, § 3528, providing that no action shall be brought against a county on an unliquidated demand, unless the same has been presented to the board of supervisors and payment demanded and refused, an unliquidated demand, such as a claim for personal injuries, must be in writing when its payment is demanded; the word "present" being generally used when formal action is indicated. Escher v. Carroll County, 125 N. W. 810, 812, 146 Iowa, 738.

Of claim against an estate

"Present," as used in P. S. 2820, and "exhibit," as used in section 2824, as indicating how a creditor of the estate is to get his claim before the commissioners for allowance, are synonymous; the statute requiring no particular formalities to constitute a sufficient presentation. Batchelder v. White's Adm'r, 71 Atl. 1111, 1112, 82 Vt. 132.

Where a claim against an estate is exhibited to the administrator and filed in the probate court, the claim is presented within the statute requiring the presentation of claims; the word "presentation" not meaning an actual presentation to the judge and a hearing on the claim. Keys v. Keys' Estate, 116 S. W. 537, 541, 217 Mo. 48.

The "presentation" of a claim required by Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2718, providing for the development of an indebtedness against an estate, contemplates the claimant's presenting to the representative a written statement of his demand showing the amount and what it is for, and demanding payment thereof, which the representative may require to be verified. In re Brown, 112 N. Y. Supp. 599, 602, 60 Misc. Rep. 35.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2090, providing that no judgment shall be rendered for claimant on any claim for money which has not been legally "presented" to the executor or administrator, and by him rejected, the claim, when presented, must be verified by an affidavit stating the requisites prescribed by article 2070. Whitmire v. Powell (Tex.) 117 S. W. 433, 438.

Of error

Where appellee admits that, if the verdict is excessive, the trial court committed error in denying the motion for a new trial, it follows that the error is "pointed out" when appellant in his opening brief assigns as error the only ruling which the trial court made upon the question of excessive verdict, its denial of the motion for a new trial. An error is not "presented" or "pointed out" simply because appellant does not argue the matter in his opening brief, since failure to argue an assignment of error does not prevent a review of the same. There is no statute or rule of court requiring an argument of an assignment of error. Williams v. Spokane Falls & N. Ry., 87 Pac. 491, 492, 44 Wash. 363.

Of petition to governor

Acts Ala. 1903, p. 117, providing for change of a county seat, and requiring petition therefor to be "presented to the Governor," means that it must be lodged with him or his official force in some formal manner, so as to become an official document. State ex rel. Brown v. Porter, 40 South. 144, 145, 145 Ala. 541.

PRESENT (A Gift)

A "present" is an act of kindness, courtesy, or respect, and contributes to the pleasure of the receiver. State ex rel. Western Const. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Clinton County, 166 Ind. 162, 76 N. E. 986, 994 (citing Crabbe).

PRESENT

See For the Present; Personally Present.

At the first meeting of creditors, the majority creditors were represented by an attorney who had represented the bankrupt in the preparation of his consent to an adjudication, and voted for one person for trustee, and the minority creditors voted for another. Held, that a ruling that the majority creditors were not "present," for the purpose of voting, because their attorney was disqualified to represent them, but were present for the purpose of being counted in determining whether the person voted for by the minority creditors had received the votes of a majority in number and value of the creditors present, was erroneous, since creditors are not to be counted as present merely because their claims have been allowed, but must attend in person or by duly authorized agent or attorney, and those creditors who do so attend constitute the meeting. In re Kaufman, 179 Fed. 552, 554.

PRESENT CONSIDERATION

Where a corporation executed a mortgage to claimants to secure their indorsement of its notes, such mortgage was based on a present consideration within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67d, 30 Stat. 564, 565, protecting liens given or accepted in good faith for a "present consideration" which have been recorded according to law, if record thereof is necessary, etc. In re Farmers' Supply Co., 170 Fed. 502, 507.

A Missouri state bank lent to a corporation, the president of which was also president and a director of the bank, sums in excess of the limit allowed by the law of the state, and held the corporation's notes therefor. The bank examiner required the indebtedness to be reduced, whereupon it was divided and notes of other parties connected with the officers, some of whom were irresponsible, were substituted for a portion of it; all being secured by a mortgage on the corporation's property which was not recorded. Later, on the insistence of the bank examiner, others, including the cashier of the bank, indorsed such notes. The cashier, who made the examinations, afterward assumed all of the notes, taking a note and mortgage from the corporation to himself therefor, and surrendering the bank's mortgage. The corporation was insolvent when both mortgages were given, as all parties had reasonable cause to believe, and became a bankrupt within four months after making the mortgage to the cashier. Held that, notwithstanding the substitution of the individual notes for those of the corporation, it remained the real debtor, and by indorsing such notes the cashier became its creditor; that the mortgage to him, which was not recorded until suits against the corporation were threatened, was not given or accepted in good faith and for a "present consideration," within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67d, 30 Stat. 564, but as a fraud upon such act, void under subdivision "e" of said section. McAttee v. Shade, 185 Fed. 442, 449, 107 C. C. A. 512.

The words "present fair consideration" must be determined from all the facts and conditions surrounding the purchase, and if the price paid was in cash, and an amount equal to the fair value of the goods, under all the circumstances, the consideration would be present and fair. Schilling v. Curran, 76 Pac. 998, 1002, 30 Mont. 370.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 573, 30 Stat. 564, which requires a "present fair consideration" to support a mortgage given within four months prior to bankruptcy, a mortgage securing notes for $1,500, bearing 6 per cent. interest, for which the consideration was a loan of $1,310, the remainder being for additional interest and bonus, will be sustained, where taken in good faith, but only to the extent of the money actually advanced, with interest. Where the security is taken for a loan of money, the present fair consideration cannot ordinarily be greater than the sum of money lent. In re Sawyer, 130 Fed. 384.

PRESENT IN COURT

The judge presiding at a criminal trial was "present in court" when an act constituting contempt was committed, though he was in his retiring room during a short recess while waiting for the arrival of an interpreter for a witness who had already been called to the stand. McCarthy v. Hugo, 73 Atl. 778, 780, 82 Conn. 262, 185 Am. St. Rep. 270, 17 Ann. Cas. 219.

PRESENT INCUMBRANCE

A mortgage on a vessel to secure a debt of the mortgagor is a "present incumbrance" by a chattel mortgage, within the meaning of a provision of a policy of insurance on such vessel making it void, in case of such "incumbrance," so long as the debt secured is outstanding, although it is not in default. Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 170 Fed. 279, 282, 283, 95 C. C. A. 475.

PRESENT INDEBTEDNESS

Where a city, through its mayor and city council, enters into a contract with an accountant for the auditing of the city's books and the installation of a new auditing system at a stipulated price per diem, including hotel fare and traveling expenses, the work to begin at once and continue until completed, where there is no provision in the contract as to when or how the services are to be paid for, such contract should be construed as an entirety, the rate per diem being a mere means of estimating the entire debt; and the indebtedness incurred thereunder is a "present indebtedness," chargeable against the city's funds for the year in which the contract is made. Haskins & Sells v. Oklahoma City, 126 Pac. 204, 206, 36 Okl. 57.

PRESENT INTEREST

One having a mere interest by assignment in a part of the rents is not the owner of a "present or vested interest," within Gen. St. c. 63, art. 6, § 1, providing that remainder and contingent interests may be sold upon petition of any person having a vested or present interest, if the court is satisfied that all interests would be subserved by such sale. Kalfus v. Davie (Ky.) 110 S. W. 871, 878.

PRESENT PLACE OF ABODE

Ordinarily "usual place of abode," as applied to the service of process, is a much more restricted term than "residence" and means the place where the defendant is actually living when service is made. Service at the dwellinghouse of defendant, which is not described as his usual place of abode, is not sufficient. The purpose of the use of the term in the act relating to service of process has primary reference to the place where defendant is usually to be found. Therefore "usual place of abode" means "present place of abode." Accordingly, if defendant be confined in a jail, it is his usual place of abode, within the statute, although his residence was compulsory. As defined in this state, the term means the customary or settled place of residence. In the case of a married man the "house of his usual abode" is prima facie the house wherein his wife and family reside. In this case summons served on the daughter of the defendant, at the house of her mother, who for some months had lived separate and apart from her husband, on premises upon which he had never been, and after he had become a resident of Montana, was not properly served. Berryhill v. Sepp, 119 N. W. 404, 405, 106 Minn. 458, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344 (citing and adopting State v. Toland, 15 S. E. 599, 600, 86 S. C. 515; Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 182, 192; Walker v. Stevens, 72 N. W. 1038, 52 Neb. 653; Mygatt v. Coe, 44 Atl. 198, 199, 63 N. J. Law, 510; Ser v. Bobst, 8 Mo. 508, 507; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. Ed. 398; Madison County Bank v. Suman's Adm'r, 79 Mo. 527, 530; Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Norris, 63 N. W. 634, 61 Minn. 236).

PRESENT POSITIONS

Plaintiff was employed as foreman machinist for a corporation for five years at a stated weekly wage and in addition $1,000 par value of the common stock of the corporation at the end of each year of service. Plaintiff worked until the corporation became insolvent. Its assets and business were purchased at foreclosure sale by defendant, which was organized as part of a reorganization plan. The business was conducted without interruption, and the same man was president of both corporations. Defendant thereafter posted a bulletin reciting that the former employes were invited to continue in their "present positions." Held that the term "present positions" had reference only to the general character of the work performed by plaintiff and the other employes, and did not constitute an assumption by defendant of the terms of plaintiff's contract with the original corporations. Aldridge v. Fore River Shipbuilding Co., 87 N. E. 485, 486, 201 Mass. 131.

PRESENT PRICES

The expression "present prices," in an agreement to renew an existing contract to purchase glass at "present prices," means the standard uniform list of prices prevailing at the time of the making of the agreement. Flash v. Rossiter, 102 N. Y. Supp. 449, 453, 116 App. Div. 880.

PRESENT PROVISION

Testator executed a will devising more than half of his property in trust to a charitable use, and thereafter executed a codicil revoking the legacies and trusts, and assigning as a reason therefor that "present provisions" had been made for the legatees by the declaration of trust. Held, that the words "present provision" should be construed as meaning that testator had made a "present provision" for those for whom he had previously made a testamentary provision; he having in the first preamble stated that he desired to irrevocably appropriate and settle certain securities on a college, subject to the payment of certain sums thereafter designated. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 93 N. Y. Supp. 92, 105, 103 App. Div. 327.

PRESENT SERVICE

A grand jury, recalled under Cr. Code, div. 11, § 3 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 38, § 405), after being dismissed, to discharge some additional duties during the same term at which it had been impaneled and sworn, need not be resworn; the oath prescribed by Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 18, to "diligently inquire into and true presentment make of all such matters and things as shall be given you in charge, or shall otherwise come to your knowledge, touching the present service," being broad enough to cover all service such jury may render during the term—"present service" meaning all the services that may be lawfully required of such jury during its existence as an organized body. People v. McCauley, 100 N. E. 182, 185, 256 Ill. 504.

PRESENTLY

A contract the legal import of which is that it shall be performed "presently" means, not that it may be performed "within a reasonable time," but that it must be performed "immediately; now; at once." Hawkins v. Studdard, 71 S. E. 1112, 1113, 136 Ga. 727.

PRESENTMENTIn commercial law

"'Presentment for payment' and 'presentment for acceptance' are two different acts, well known to the law of negotiable instruments. Presentment for payment cannot be made until the instrument presented for payment is due. Presentment for acceptance must be made before the instrument presented for acceptance is due." First Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Whitmore, 177 Fed. 397, 399, 101 C. C. A. 401.

In criminal law

A "presentment" is an accusation made by grand jurors upon personal knowledge or observation of the facts instead of upon the testimony of witnesses. McKinney v. United States, 199 Fed. 25, 28, 117 C. C. A. 403.

A "presentment" is a notice taken by the grand jury of any offense from the knowledge or observation of the grand jurors without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the government, and is an informal accusation generally regarded in the light of an instruction on which an indictment can be framed, and is also defined as an accusation without any bill before the grand jury and afterwards reduced to a formal indictment. In re Osborne, 125 N. Y. Supp. 313, 315, 68 Misc. Rep. 597.

"A 'presentment,' properly speaking, is the notice taken by a grand jury of any offense from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the King, as the 'presentment' of a nuisance, a libel, and the like, upon which the officer of the court must afterwards frame an indictment, before the party presented can be put to answer it." Hale v. Henkel, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 373, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652 (quoting and approving definition in 4 Bl. Comm. p. 301).

"The term 'presentment,' in its stricter meaning, is an accusation of the grand jury sua sponte, or, as Judge Story puts it, 'an accusation made ex mero motu,' as distinguished from an 'indictment' which was a written accusation preferred to the grand jury and presented upon oath at the instance of the government." A "presentment" was regarded as the basis of an "indictment." The distinction does not now often practically appear, inasmuch as the grand jury is rarely the origin of accusation, as was its prototype. A "presentment" is a report made by a grand jury of their own motion either on their own knowledge or on evidence before them concerning some wrongdoing and presented to the court, usually as a basis for an "indictment," or the finding and setting forth of charges in an "indictment." "Presentment," in a larger sense of the term, includes every proceeding of a grand jury. Code Cr. Proc. § 260, provides that the grand jury must inquire into the case of every person imprisoned in the jail on a criminal charge and not indicted; (2) into the condition and management of the public prisons in the county; and (3) into the willful and corrupt misconduct in office of public officers. Section 261 gives them free access to public prisons and the examination of public records. While there is no specific provision for a report as the result of an inquiry, section 250, in referring to the preservation of the minutes of the proceedings of the grand jury, uses the term "presentment" in contradistinction to "indictment." Held, that the grand jury may, in the exercise of its inquisitorial powers, make a presentment in the nature of a report, although an indictment cannot or does not follow it, and such report need not be stricken out because it incidentally designates some public official as responsible for omissions or commissions. In re Jones, 92 N. Y. Supp. 275, 276, 101 App. Div. 609 (quoting and adopting definitions in Stand. Dict.; Bish. Cr. Proc. § 137; Hochheimer on the Law of Crime and Criminal Proceedings; and citing Thayer's Preliminary Treatise on Evidence in Common Law; Green's Short History of the English People, 111; Ency. Brit. "Jury," quoting Stubbs; Bl. Comm. c. 21).

PRESERVATION—PRESERVE

See Self-Preservation; Sweetmeats and Preserved Fruits.

The process of hermetically sealing fruit in tin cans, thus preserving it from decay until the cans are opened, constitutes "preservation," rather than "preparation"; and fruit pulp that has been cooked and subjected to such sealing process is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, as fruit "preserved * * * in its own juices," rather than under paragraph 262, 30 Stat. 171, as fruit "prepared in any manner." Habicht, Braun & Co. v. United States, 175 Fed. 1009, 1012.

As used in the tariff act, the term "preserved in spirits" means simply put in spirits for the purpose of preservation or to restrict fermentation and decay. Orange and lemon peel immersed in brine for the purpose of protecting it from decay during transit, without affecting its properties or quality, is not "preserved," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 267, 30 Stat. 172, but is free of duty as "not preserved, candied, or dried," under section 2, Free List, par. 627, 30 Stat. 200. Cause

Mfg. Co. v. United States, 150 Fed. 419, 420, 423.

The provision in paragraph 241, Schedule G, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 170, for mushrooms "prepared or preserved," does not include mushrooms dried merely by evaporation, which are dutiable under paragraph 257 of said act, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, as "vegetables in their natural state." Kraut v. United States, 139 Fed. 94, 95.

Fish roe, or caviar, which was necessarily put into brine before importation, because otherwise it would not be suitable for food after importation, is "preserved for food purposes," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 549, 30 Stat. 197, which excludes from that paragraph fish roe thus preserved. Hansen & Dieckmann v. United States, 175 Fed. 892.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, for "comfits, sweetmeats, and fruits preserved in sugar, molasses, spirits, or in their own juices," refers to a class of goods commercially known as preserved fruits, and is intended to apply to fruits treated so as to become a preserve or comfit, and not to such as merely remain temporarily in their natural juice. Causse Mfg. Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 4, 5, 80 C. O. A. 461.

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 263, 30 Stat. 171, provides for fruit "preserved in sugar" and for pineapples "preserved in their own juice." Held, as to pineapples in hermetically sealed cans, in their own juice, but with 7 to 20 per cent. of sugar added for flavoring only, that they were dutiable under the latter rather than the former provision. United States v. J. S. Johnson & Co., 166 Fed. 1002, 1003.

Mushrooms dried in order to preserve them, and placed in hermetically sealed tins holding from 30 to 45 pounds, are within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 241, relating to "mushrooms prepared or preserved, in tins, jars, bottles, or similar packages," rather than paragraph 257, relating to "vegetables in their natural state." Choy Chong Woh & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 879, 82 C. O. A. 608.

The slicing of vegetables solely to facilitate the natural drying operation is not sufficient to remove them from their natural state; and mushrooms cleaned, sliced, and dried in the sun are dutiable as "vegetables in their natural state," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 257, 30 Stat. 171, rather than as "vegetables prepared or preserved," under paragraph 241, 30 Stat. 170. A. Zanmati & Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 880, 82 C. O. A. 626.

Cauliflowers that have been trimmed, washed, and packed in brine for preservation during transportation, and to keep them in their natural state, and that when taken out of it and washed are still in their natural state, are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 257, 30 Stat. 171, as "vegetables in their natural state," rather than under paragraph 241, 30 Stat. 170, as "vegetables prepared or preserved." United States v. Strohmeier & Arpe Co., 167 Fed. 533, 534, 93 C. O. A. 65.

PRESERVATION OF PRINCIPAL

Where a will authorized executors to sell stock whenever necessary "for the preservation of the principal sum invested," their authority to sell was for such preservation only, and not for profits which might be realized on the sale thereof. In re Stevens, 95 N. Y. Supp. 297, 305, 46 Misc. Rep. 623.

PRESIDE

PRESIDENT

See, also, Pres.; Pt.

Where a corporation owning realty sells it through A., its president, to B., and notes for the purchase money are signed "B., Trustee," which are payable to "A., President," and the latter, in the name and behalf of the corporation, makes a deed to the property to "B., Trustee," who, without the knowledge of the corporation, makes the purchase for himself and others, and the possession, use, and benefit of the property goes to those for whom he thus purchases, the word "president" and the word "trustee" are merely descriptio personarum. Coaling Coal & Gas Co. v. Howard, 61 S. E. 987, 988, 130 Ga. 807, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1051.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 995, as amended by act of March 23, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 115), providing that service of process on the president or other chief officer of a corporation, or, in his absence, by leaving a copy at any business office of the company with the person having charge thereof, shall be deemed sufficient, and that if the corporation have no business office in the county where suit is brought, or if no person be found in charge thereof, and the president or chief officer cannot be found in the county, a summons shall be issued, directed to the sheriff of any county in the state, or any other state where the president or chief officer may reside or be found, and the service thereof shall be the same as above, the phrases "president or other chief officer" and "president or chief officer" are used synonymously; and hence a sheriff's return of summons in an action against a railroad company that he executed the writ on the defendant's local agent within his county, "the president or chief officer" of the railroad company not being found therein, is sufficient. Brassfield v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 83 S. W. 1032, 1033, 109 Mo. App. 710.

PRESIDING JUDGE

In Laws 1909, c. 112, providing for an additional division of the district court in certain counties, and that upon the taking effect of the act the duly elected and presiding judge of the district court of each such county shall be the judge of the first division of the district court for the remainder of his regular term of office, "presiding" is used as the equivalent of "officiating" or "acting," and referred to the incumbent of the office when the act took effect. State ex rel. Dawson v. Meek, 120 Pac. 555, 557, 86 Kan. 576.

The statute requiring that the special venire in criminal cases shall be drawn by the "presiding judge" means the venire drawn while the judge is presiding, and does not contemplate that it shall be drawn by the judge who presides at the trial. Laws v. State, 42 South. 40, 41, 144 Ala. 118.

Neither under Act 1885 (Acts 1884-85, p. 475, § 30), providing that affidavits in criminal prosecutions in the city court of Macon shall be made before the judge of such court, nor under constitutional provision (Civ. Code 1895, § 5851), authorizing the judge of the city court and the superior court to "preside" in the courts of each other, respectively, where either is disqualified, did the judge of the superior court of Macon circuit have authority to administer an oath and attest an affidavit made as a basis for an accusation in the city court of Macon, on the ground that the judge of the latter court was disqualified to act; such act not being presiding in a case in a city court, within the meaning of the Constitution. Edmondson v. State, 51 S. E. 301, 302, 123 Ga. 194.

In tariff act

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 135, 30 Stat. 161, relating to "pressed or stamped shapes," includes steel stampings which have been pressed or stamped into an openwork or raised pattern and are used in manufacturing ornaments, etc. United States v. A. & H. Veith, 169 Fed. 665.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, 30 Stat. 156, the term "molded," as applied to glassware, is synonymous with "pressed." United States v. Heil Chemical Co., 178 Fed. 537, 540, 102 C. C. A. 47.

PRESS FEEDER

The "helper" of an operator or pressman of a printing press is sometimes called a

PRESUME

To "presume" is defined by Webster as "to assume" to be true, or entitled to belief without examination or proof. Ferrari v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 134, 136, 118 App. Div. 155.

The word "presume" is defined as meaning, "to venture, go, or act by an assumption of leave or authority not granted; to go beyond what is warranted by the circumstances of the case." Pearce v. State, 132 S. W. 986, 987, 97 Ark. 5.

In a holding that, as against a party making a plea, the law presumes its allegations to be true because they are against his interests, the word "presume" is not to be taken as meaning that the party was concluded by the admission, nor that the allegations are not subject to contradiction. Hesston State Bank v. Luthy, 137 S. W. 66, 155 Mo. App. 363.

In an action for wrongful discharge from employment, where the court charges that the law presumes, when a man hires to do a certain thing, that he is competent to do it, and, if he is not competent, the person who hires him has a right to displace him, the term "the law presumes," in this context, does not indicate a legal presumption, such as could not be rebutted by proof, and the jury could not have been misled by it. Bagwell v. Milam, 71 S. E. 684, 685, 9 Ga. App. 315.

A sale in violation of the bulk sales law (Laws 1908, c. 100), declaring that a sale of a stock of merchandise in bulk shall be presumed to be fraudulent as against the seller's creditors, unless specified conditions are complied with, is prima facie fraudulent, and, unless the purchaser shows a compliance with the conditions as to inventory and notice to creditors, the sale is absolutely void; the word "presumed" having no fixed meaning, and in one instance the presumption declared may be only prima facie, while in another conclusive. Wm. R. Moore Dry Goods Co. v. Rowe & Carithers, 54 So. 659, 660, 99 Miss. 30, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1213.

Assume synonymous

The word "assume," in Rev. Laws, c. 102 § 1, providing that whoever assumes to be a common victualer, without being licensed as such, shall forfeit a specified sum, is synonymous with the word "presume," as used in Gen. St. 1860, c. 88, § 1, and Pub. St. 1882, c. 102, § 1, which are the same as Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 1, with the exception that the word "presume" is used instead of "assume." Commonwealth v. Lavery, 73 N. E. 884, 188 Mass. 13.

PRESUMPTION

See Disputable Presumption; Dry Presumptions; Legal Presumption; Rebuttable Presumption.

"Presumptions" may be looked on as the bats of the law, flitting in the twilight, but disappearing in the sunshine of actual facts." Mackowik v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 94 S. W. 256, 262, 196 Mo. 550.

"The French Civil Code calls all 'presumptions' consequences that the law or the judge draws from a known fact to an unknown fact, and a legal presumption one that a special law applies to certain facts. Ca-chard's Translation, arts. 1349, 1350." In re Cowdry's Will, 60 Atl. 141, 142, 77 Vt. 359, 3 Ann. Cas. 70.

A "presumption" may be called an "instrument of proof" in the sense that it determines from whom evidence shall come, and it may be called something in the nature of evidence for the same reason. "'Presumptions' are not in themselves either argument or evidence, although for the time being they accomplish the result of both. * * * Presumptions, assumption, taking for granted are simply so many names for an act or process which aids and shortens inquiry and argument." Overcash v. Charlotte Electric Ry., Light & Power Co., 57 S. E. 377, 380, 144 N. C. 572, 12 Ann. Cas. 1040 (quoting and adopting the definition of Thayer, Ev. 315).

A "presumption" is generally only a rule of law as to which party shall first proceed and go forward with the evidence to prove an issue. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Balderson, 128 N. W. 482, 483, 26 S. D. 399.

A "presumption" is not evidence of anything, and only relates to a rule of law as to which party shall first go forward and produce evidence sustaining the matter in issue. A "presumption" will serve as and in the place of evidence in favor of one party or the other until prima facie evidence has been adduced by the opposite party, but the presumption should never be placed in the scale to be weighed as evidence. The presumption, when the opposite party has produced prima facie evidence, has spent its force and served its purpose, and the party then, in whose favor the presumption operated, must meet his opponent's prima facie evidence with evidence and not presumptions. A "presumption" is not evidence of a fact, but purely a conclusion. Peters v. Lohr, 124 N. W. 853, 855, 24 S. D. 605 (citing Elliott, Ev. §§ 91, 92, 93; Wig. Ev. §§ 2490, 2491).

"Presumptions" are a sort of proof, and a substitute in certain stages of a case for affirmative testimony. A disputable presumption may operate as a prima facie case upon a particular point. A presumption acting as a prima facie case stands as proved until the prima facie is destroyed by controverting evidence." The casting of the burden of proof on one party or the other in a given case does not destroy the presumptions in favor of a party which exist under the general law of evidence. The Wildcroft, 130 Fed. 521, 528, 65 C. C. A. 145.

The law does not attach the "presumption" of guilt to any given circumstance, nor does it require the accused to overcome the presumption thereby raised in order to be entitled to an acquittal. What the law does say is that the fact of possession is evidence of guilt, upon which a conviction may properly be returned, unless the other facts or circumstances developed be such that, notwithstanding the recent possession, the jury still entertains a reasonable doubt of the defendant's participation in the crime. It is in this sense that the words "presumption" and "prima facie evidence" must be understood, when employed in this connection. State v. Brady, 97 N. W. 62, 64, 121 Iowa, 561, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 199.

A "presumption" is neither more nor less than that which is accepted as a fact without proof by reason of its probability born of human experience; thus where, on the death of an attorney, his will was found among his private papers in a strong box, with certain erasures and interlineations in lead pencil, it would be presumed that the same were made with a view of executing a new will, but they would not be given effect as a revocation of the existing will prior to the execution of a new one. In re Ralsbeck's Will, 102 N. Y. Supp. 967, 969, 52 Misc. Rep. 279.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 784, defining a "presumption" as a deduction from particular facts, it will be presumed that, when an assault with intent to commit robbery is made by placing the muzzle of a pistol at or near the body of a person from whom money or property is expected to be taken by force, the weapon so employed is loaded with powder and ball, and is a dangerous weapon, and imposes upon the person accused, if he admit the use of the pistol, the burden of proving it was not so charged. State v. Parr, 103 Pac. 434, 437, 54 Or. 316.

"Presumptions" are rules of convenience, based upon experience or public policy, and established to facilitate the trial of causes. Except in a few instances of conclusive presumptions, where there are conflicting presumptions, one is not as a matter of law stronger or weaker than the other; but the whole case is then thrown open, to be decided as a fact on all the evidence. Turner v. Williams, 89 N. E. 110, 112, 202 Mass. 500, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1199, 132 Am. St. Rep. 511.

While the statement in the instruction in defining the word "presumption," within St.

1898, § 2810, relative to presumption of fraud against a seller's creditors, where there is not an immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession, to the effect that such presumption was not conclusive, but subject to explanation, that "it is only to be considered fraudulent in the absence of any explanation on the part of the purchaser," was incorrect by itself, as the presumption from continued possession by the seller is only to be overcome by a satisfactory explanation, not merely by "any" explanation, yet the next sentence having been that the jury were to be controlled by such explanation only in case it satisfied them that the purchase was made in good faith, the correct idea will be considered to have been conveyed to the jury. Seivert v. Galvin, 118 N. W. 680, 682, 133 Wis. 391.

A "presumption" is the act of presuming. The act of a party in attempting to bribe a witness of the adverse party affords no presumption against the party's evidence on the question testified to by the witness, and does not have the effect of gaining a more ready admission to the evidence of the adverse party on that question, but is to be considered in weighing the evidence, and the failure of a party to produce a witness within his reach raises no unfavorable presumption against him, but the jury may consider that, if called, the testimony of the absent witness would not sustain the party's contention. Ferrari v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 134, 136, 118 App. Div. 155.

As distinguished from inference

The fundamental characteristic of a "presumption," as distinguished from an "inference," is that the former affects the duty of producing further testimony, not merely the weight of that already produced. Bower v. Bower, 74 Atl. 522, 525, 78 N. J. Law, 387.

An "inference" is nothing more than a permissible deduction from the evidence, while a "presumption" is compulsory, and cannot be disregarded by the jury. Territory v. Lucero, 120 Pac. 304, 305, 16 N. M. 652, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 58.

As inference

A "presumption" is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts. Lake County v. Neilon, 74 Pac. 212, 214, 44 Or. 14; Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 77 Pac. 657, 658, 143 Cal. 646; People v. Wong Sang Lung, 84 Pac. 843, 845, 3 Cal. App. 221 (citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1959).

A "presumption" is a rule of law that a particular inference shall be drawn from particular facts or evidence until the truth of the inference is disproved. Leask v. Hoagland, 98 N. E. 395, 398, 205 N. Y. 171, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1199; Brandt v. Morning Journal Ass'n, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1002, 1004, 81 App. Div. 183 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.); State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289

(quoting Lawson, Presump. Ev. 639, 640); First Nat. Bank v. Adams, 118 N. W. 1055, 82 Neb. 801.

"Presumptions" are inferences which common sense draws from the known course of events or from circumstances usually occurring in such cases. Sears v. Vaughan, 82 N. E. 881, 887, 230 Ill. 572.

"Presumptions" and inferences are logically the same. Thus, from one fact proven, another may be inferred or presumed, if the inference or presumption is a logical result, but a fact so inferred or presumed cannot become an established fact for the purpose of serving as a base for a further inference or presumption. Miller v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 344, 346, 18 N. D. 19, 19 Ann. Cas. 1215 (quoting Diel v. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co., 37 Mo. App. 454).

A "presumption" is defined as an inference, affirmative or disaffirmative, of the truth or falsity of any proposition of fact drawn by a process of probable reasoning in the absence of actual certainty of its truth or falsity, or until such certainty can be ascertained. In re Dailey's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 538, 540, 43 Misc. Rep. 552.

"A 'presumption' is simply an inference or conclusion logically deduced from known data." It follows that, when contradictory conclusions are asserted as resulting from the same premises, one or the other or possibly both must be erroneous. Western Maryland R. Co. v. Shivers, 61 Atl. 618, 620, 101 Md. 391.

"Presumption" is a principle of law by which, for the furtherance and support of right, facts not established by positive evidence are inferred from circumstances. Where the thing itself is unseen and unknown, in a close sense, it may yet be deemed seen and known in the light of the knowledge of mankind based on frequent occurrence and found from experience to be generally accordant with truth. A presumption, therefore, of a rebuttable character, such as here, only remains in force until repelled by contrary evidence. It follows that, when the evidence is contrary to the presumption invoked, the presumption itself cannot be laid hold of for use in administering justice in a particular case. Take a familiar illustration: A presumption of death arises under certain circumstances, on the lapse of a given period of time; yet that presumption could not be invoked by plaintiff in a case where plaintiff's evidence showed the man alive. The basic principle upon which presumptions are built is philosophically related to the doctrine of faith. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Rodan v. St. Louis Transit Co., 105 S. W. 1061, 1068, 207 Mo. 392 (quoting 1 Mat. Presump. Ev., Heb. XI, 1, q. v.).

An instruction that where two witnesses directly contradict each other, and the veracity of neither is impeached, "the presumption of truth is in favor of the witness who swears affirmatively," and that the positive testimony of a single witness is entitled to more weight than that of two witnesses, equally credible, who testify negatively, is not misleading in using the words "presumption of truth"; the word "presumption" meaning the act of believing, on probable evidence and meaning, the inference which a reasonable person will, as a rule, draw from given circumstances. Anderson v. Horlick's Malted Milk Co., 119 N. W. 342, 345, 137 Wis. 569.

"Presumption" is a principle of law by which, for the furtherance and support of right, facts not established by positive evidence are inferred from circumstances. Schmidt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 90 S. W. 136, 139, 191 Mo. 215, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 196 (quoting and adopting definition in Lynch v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 20 S. W. 642, 112 Mo. 433).

"Presumptions" are aids to reasoning and argumentation which assume the truth of certain matters for the purpose of some given inquiry. They may be grounded on general experience or probability of any kind, or merely on policy and convention. On whatever basis they rest, they operate in advance of argument or evidence, or, irrespective of it, by taking something for granted—by assuming its existence. . . . A presumption is in its characteristic features a rule of law laid down by the judge, and attaching to an evidentiary fact certain consequences as to the production of evidence by the opponent. They are based on their policy upon the probative strength as a matter of reasoning and inference of the evidentiary fact, but the presumption is not the fact itself, nor the inference itself, but the legal consequence attached to it." Vincent v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 58 Atl. 963, 966, 77 Conn. 281 (quoting Thayer, Ev. 314; Lisbon v. Lyman, 49 N. H. 553; Wigmore, Greenleaf, Ev. § 147).

Presumption on presumption

One "presumption" cannot rest upon another. Miller v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 344, 346, 18 N. D. 19, 19 Ann. Cas. 1215.

PRESUMPTION OF FACT

The term "presumption of fact" is a misnomer, and amounts to no more than an inference drawn by the jury. Modern Woodmen of America v. Kincheloe (Ind.) 93 N. E. 452, 454.

"Presumptions of fact" are exclusively for the jury, to be decided by the ordinary test of human experience. Dyer v. State, 65 S. E. 42, 43, 6 Ga. App. 390 (quoting and approving Kinnebrew v. State, 5 S. E. 59, 80 Ga. 239).

"A 'presumption of fact' is a rule of law that a fact otherwise doubtful may be inferred from a fact which is proved. A presumption is an inference as to the existence of a fact, not actually known, arising from its usual or necessary connections with others, which are known. Presumptions of fact are but inferences drawn from other facts and circumstances in the case, and should be made upon common principles of induction. Presumptions of fact are at best but mere arguments, and are to be judged by the common and received tests of the truth of propositions and the validity of arguments." State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289 (quoting Lawson, Presump. Ev. 639, 640).

"Presumptions of fact" are but conclusions drawn from particular circumstances; the connection between them and the sought for fact having received such sanction in experience as to have become recognized as justifying the assumption. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Pritchard, 79 N. E. 508, 512, 168 Ind. 398, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 857 (citing 1 Starkie, Ev. p. 78; Sutphen v. Cushman, 35 Ill. 186, 201).

"Presumptions of fact" are inferences which enlightened common sense and experience may draw from the connection, relation, and coincidence of facts and circumstances with each other. If the fact in question necessarily accompanies, or is usually associated with, certain other facts and circumstances, such associated facts and circumstances are admissible in evidence as tending to prove or affording the basis for an inference of the existence of the disputed fact. The so-called "presumption of fact" must always be drawn by the trial court or jury from the evidence, and the only "presumptions of fact" which the law recognizes are such immediate inferences as the court or jury trying the cause may reasonably draw from facts proved. City of Indianapolis v. Keeley, 79 N. E. 499, 508, 167 Ind. 516.

"Presumptions of fact" are derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any rules of law whatever. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bennett, 35 N. E. 1033, 1039, 9 Ind. App. 92.

"Presumptions of fact" are but inferences drawn from other facts and circumstances in a case and should be made upon the common principles of induction. Cohabitation, having begun meretriciously, will be presumed to have so continued, in the absence of clear proof of a subsequent marriage. Dietrich v. Dietrich, 112 N. Y. Supp. 968, 972, 128 App. Div. 564 (citing O'Gara v. Eislenohr, 38 N. Y. 296).

The "presumption of death" is a rule of evidence which determines the sufficiency of certain facts to discharge the burden of proof from the party on whom it is placed by the pleadings. When those facts appear, the burden is discharged until something else is disclosed. A presumption of death from a long absence is not an imperative rule of law, where the circumstances of disappearance permit any different inference. Plaintiff sued upon a benefit certificate. Her testimony showed that the insured disappeared more than seven years before, and that he had not been heard from since. It appeared also that there was a deficit in his accounts as an officer of the lodge, which would have become known on the day following his disappearance. Held, error to instruct the jury that, if they found that he disappeared and had not been heard of for seven years, "then, in the absence of any rebutting circumstances, he is presumed to be dead." Winter v. Supreme Lodge K. of P., 69 S. W. 662, 666, 96 Mo. App. 1.

Presumption of law distinguished

A "presumption of law" is a rule of law which the court draws from the requisite facts before it, and it must charge the jury to find in accordance therewith, while a presumption of fact is an inference of fact which cannot at common law be made without the intervention of the jury. Mitchell v. Stanton (Tex.) 139 S. W. 1033, 1036.

It was argued that prior decisions of the court sharply discriminated between "presumptions of law" and presumptions of fact, and that, whenever a "presumption of fact" was given by the court as a "presumption of law," it was error necessitating reversal, and that the presumption of the truth of an admission against interest was a "presumption of fact" and not of law, but the majority of the court were averse to modifying the rule announced in the former cases as against the objection that the attempted distinction between a "presumption of law" and the so-called "presumption of fact" is often so metaphysical, subtle, and shadowy as to elude analysis. Ausmus v. People, 107 Pac. 204, 215, 216, 47 Colo. 167, 19 Ann. Cas. 491.

PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE

"Presumption of innocence" is an instrument of proof created by law in favor of one accused, whereby his innocence is established until sufficient proof is introduced to overcome the proof which the law has created. Bowman v. Little, 61 Atl. 1084, 1088, 101 Md. 273 (citing Coffin v. United States, 156 U. S. 432, 15 Sup. Ct. 394, 39 L. Ed. 481).

"Presumption of innocence" in a civil case, where an officer, acting under process, is charged with an assault, means that it is presumed that the defendant did not commit the act charged. McKinstry v. Collins, 56 Atl. 985, 988, 76 Vt. 221 (citing Bradish v. Bliss, 35 Vt. 328; Currier v. Richardson, 22 Atl. 625, 63 Vt. 620).

The "presumption of innocence" is a legal inference based on the fact that the majority of men are not criminals, and is without evidence to support it. State v. Reilly, 116 Pac. 481, 482, 85 Kan. 175.

The "presumption of innocence" fixes the burden of proof in the first instance, and it is not evidence, and does not partake of the nature of evidence. The presumption of innocence remains with defendant only until it is overcome, and does not necessarily remain with him throughout the whole of the trial. Culpepper v. State, 111 Pac. 679, 680, 4 Okl. Cr. 103, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1166, 140 Am. St. Rep. 668.

An instruction that if, after examining and weighing all the evidence carefully, there is left in the minds of the jury a "presumption of innocence" in favor of accused, they should acquit was properly refused, as a presumption of innocence is a conclusion of law, having no relation to a condition of mind produced by proof. Gordon v. State, 41 South. 847, 849, 147 Ala. 42.

The law presumes that one accused of crime is innocent of the crime charged in the indictment and of every material act and element of the crime, and this "presumption of innocence," obtains in his favor until his guilt has been established by evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 573, 14 Okl. 477.

PRESUMPTION OF LAW

See Conclusive Presumption of Law.

A "presumption of law" is a rule of law that a particular inference shall be drawn by a court or jury from a particular circumstance. State v. Dodds, 46 S. E. 228, 231, 54 W. Va. 289 (citing Lawson, Presump. Ev. 639, 640).

"Presumptions of law" are conclusions and inferences which the law draws from given facts. Dyer v. State, 65 S. E. 42, 43, 6 Ga. App. 390 (quoting and adopting Kinnbrew v. State, 5 S. E. 59, 80 Ga. 239).

"Presumed as a matter of law" is synonymous with conclusively presumed. Vaughn v. Glens Falls Portland Cement Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 979, 981, 105 App. Div. 136.

A "presumption of law" establishes a certainty. The presumption arising from possession of recently stolen property is one of fact and not of law. Guilt may or may not be inferred from such possession, and whether, under the circumstances, the inference is sufficient to establish guilt is a question of fact for the jury. And it is error to instruct the jury that possession of stolen property, under the circumstances, was prima facie evidence of guilt, unless accounted for by a reasonable explanation. State v. Hoshaw, 94 N. W. 873, 874, 89 Minn. 307.

"Presumptions of law" are such inferences as are warranted by the legal experience of courts in administering justice, and are usually founded upon reasons of public policy and social convenience and safety. Some of these presumptions have become so well established as to be conclusive as rules of law, while others are only prima facie evidence, and may be rebutted. City of Indianapolis v. Keeley, 79 N. E. 499, 503, 167 Ind. 518.

"Presumptions of law" consist of those rules which, in certain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ulterior inquiry." In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, an instruction that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant shot his wife, and cut her throat, as charged, the natural consequence of such acts would be the wife's death, and that defendant was of sound mind at the time, then the presumption of law was that defendant committed such assault, with intent to kill his wife, and if the assault, under such circumstances, was committed with a premeditated design to effect the wife's death, the defendant, being sane at the time, was guilty, was not erroneous, as charging that defendant's intent arose as a presumption of law, since the instruction required, in order to convict, that the jury "find" that the acts mentioned were done with premeditated design to effect the wife's death, and that the natural and probable consequence of such act was the death of the wife. Lowe v. State, 98 N. W. 417, 418, 423, 118 Wis. 641.

The phrase "presumed to be fraudulent and void," in Laws 1903, p. 249, c. 30, regulating the sale of stocks of merchandise in bulk, and declaring that sales in bulk, made without a compliance with the act, shall be "presumed to be fraudulent and void," only raises a legal presumption of fraud, which may be destroyed by rebutting evidence. Williams v. Fourth Nat. Bank of Wichita, Kan., 82 Pac. 496, 498, 15 Okl. 477, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334, 6 Ann. Cas. 970.

Classes

Presumptions are divided into two classes: Irrebuttable presumptions, or "presumptions of law," and rebuttable presumptions, or "presumptions of fact." Some presumptions are irrebuttable, and proceed as an arbitrary rule of law, to the effect that a particular inference of fact shall necessarily be drawn from certain established facts. There are other presumptions of law, however, which are rebuttable. All presumptions of fact proceed from other facts in proof, and supply an omitted fact in accord with the dictates of human experience on like questions, and are therefore rebuttable or disputable. It is the well-established law that a presumption of fact will not be permitted to contradict or overcome facts actually proved. Sowders v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 104 S. W. 1122, 1123, 127 Mo. App. 119 (quoting and adopting Lawson, Presump. Ev.; 16 Cyc. p. 1073).

"Presumptions of law" are of two kinds, conclusive and disputable, and the former are rules determining the quantity of evidence requisite to the support of any particular averment which is not permitted to be overcome by proof, while disputable presumptions are those that may be overcome by proof; but, in the absence of opposing evidence, the law will infer the existence of one fact from the proved existence of another. Modern Woodmen of America v. Kincheloe (Ind.) 83 N. E. 452, 453.

PRESUMPTION OF LEGAL KNOWLEDGE

The maxim, "Every one is presumed to know the law," does not obtain literally and generally; it is limited by the reason for the rule, viz.: To prevent violators of the Criminal Code from escaping punishment on the ground of ignorance of the law and violators of private rights escaping liability for actual loss thereby inflicted on such ground. Topolewski v. Plankinton Packing Co., 126 N. W. 554, 561, 143 Wis. 52.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE

"Presumptive evidence" authorizes but does not require conviction. People v. DeLuce, 86 N. E. 1080, 1082, 237 Ill. 541, 547.

Although the term "presumptive evidence of guilt," as applied to a certain state of facts, may perhaps sometimes indicate no more than that the facts referred to may be considered by the jury as evidence from which guilt may be inferred as a matter of fact, and not as a matter of law, yet it is always unwise, in giving the jury instructions as to the evidence, to say that from any particular fact a presumption of guilt arises. The question of guilt is one to be determined by the jury on all the facts. State v. Poe, 98 N. W. 587, 591, 123 Iowa, 118, 101 Am. St. Rep. 307.

PRESUMPTIVE GRANT

A "presumptive grant" is a grant of a highway implied by law because of public user, and it cannot be broader than the user. Meade v. City of Topeka, 88 Pac. 574, 575, 75 Kan. 61.

PRETEND

PRETENDED DEED

A "pretended deed" is a deed apparently and prima facie valid. Jones v. Hubbard, 90 S. W. 1137, 1141, 193 Mo. 147.

PRETENSE

See False Pretense.

PRETERMITTED

The word "pretermitted," according to Webster, means "to pass by," "to omit," "to disregard." Where testator provided that after-born children should share in such personal property as was not bequeathed to his wife, such after-born children were not pretermitted, within Ky. St. 1903, § 4848, entitling "pretermitted" children to such a share as they would have taken had testator died intestate, and this though testator left little or no personal property. Porter v. Porter's Ex'r, 86 S. W. 546, 547, 120 Ky. 302.

PRETERMITTED DEFENSE

Where a defendant, in an action to recover the penalty for the maintenance of an existing fence encroaching on a highway, fails to avail himself of the defense of title to land where the fence is located, such defense has become what is called a "pretermitted defense," to which equity will not listen as a ground for affirmative relief, and he is not entitled to maintain a suit in equity to restrain the supervisors from removing a contemplated fence, to be located on substantially the same ground. Swennes v. Sprain, 97 N. W. 511, 512, 120 Wis. 68.

PRETEXT

The word "pretext," in Willson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 3407, punishing any person who shall give away on any pretext intoxicating liquors without having obtained a license therefor, means any subterfuge or colorable transaction by which liquor may be disposed of, and it is not the intent of the statute to make a simple act of giving away intoxicating liquors a crime without reference to the circumstances, necessities, or conditions attending the giving, and the giving of liquors, unaccompanied by any intention to evade the law, is not necessarily a crime, and an information charging the offense must state the pretext under which the gift was made, so that accused may know what offense he is required to defend against. Weston v. Territory, 98 Pac. 360, 361, 1 Okl. Cr. 407.

PRETTY

The adverb "pretty" means "in some degree, moderately, considerably, rather, less emphatic than very; as, I am pretty sure of the fact." Nelms v. State, 51 S. E. 588, 123 Ga. 575 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

PREVAILING

A resolution adopted by a city council pending a dispute with a street railroad company as to its franchise rights with respect to fares, etc., on certain streets, which permitted the company to continue operations from time to time "upon the same terms and conditions now prevailing in the city, whether due to contract agreement or not," though made when the city knew that the company was collecting extra fares on certain lines which were without the city limits when the franchises for such lines, which authorized extra fares, were granted, did not recognize the company's right to charge extra fares on such lines; the word "prevailing" having no technical meaning and as used signifying that which is common, in operation, or prevalent, while the words "terms" and "conditions" mean the propositions and limitations which comprise the agreement and govern the parties, defining their obligations, and, as applied to an ordinance giving a franchise, signifying the boundary, limit or extent of the grant. City of Detroit v. Detroit United Ry., 139 N. W. 56, 59, 173 Mich. 314.

PREVAILING PARTY

Where, in an action to establish a lien on a chattel in favor of plaintiff, to the total exclusion of a warehouseman's lien in favor of defendant, defendant's lien for a portion of his charges was sustained, plaintiff was not entitled to costs, as being the "prevailing party," within Municipal Court Act, Laws 1902, p. 1584, § 330, awarding costs to the prevailing party in the Municipal Court. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Becket, 85 N. Y. Supp. 391, 392.

A person appearing and filing with permission of the court a motion to dismiss the action becomes thereby a party, and if his motion is sustained, and action dismissed, he is the "prevailing party," and is entitled to costs, under Rev. St. 1883, c. 82, § 130. Thomas v. Thomas, 56 Atl. 651, 653, 98 Me. 184.

Plaintiff was the "prevailing party," within Acts 1821, c. 59, giving costs to the prevailing party, where he recovered judgment in the court of common pleas for nearly $200, though on appeal he got only $37. Polleys v. Smith, 10 Me. 69, 71.

Where, in an action on a note, defendant sought to defeat any recovery on the ground that the payee had sold collaterals for more than enough to pay the note, and the court allowed plaintiff a recovery, defendant was not the "prevailing party" in whose favor costs are taxable. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. v. Randolph, 132 S. W. 255, 256, 261, 151 Mo. App. 385.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 203, § 1, providing that in civil actions the "prevailing party" shall recover costs, the prevailing party is the one in whose favor the judgment is entered, although, in the course of the proceedings, he made certain claims upon which he was held not entitled to recover, and as to which, though not otherwise, the other party prevailed. Smith v. Wenz, 73 N. E. 651, 653, 187 Mass. 421.

There can be but one prevailing party in an action at law to recover a money judgment, and though each party wins as to some issues, and as to such issues prevails, the one in whose favor the verdict compels a judgment, or who in the end secures the most points, is the "prevailing party" or winner, who, under Rev. St. 1899, § 1547 (Ann. St.

1906, p. 1174), in all civil actions is entitled to recover his costs, "except in those cases in which a different provision is made by law." Ozias v. Haley, 125 S. W. 556, 141 Mo. App. 637.

A judgment abating an appeal rendered on a plea in abatement is a determination of an issue in favor of the pleader, and disposes of a pending cause, and makes the pleader the "prevailing party" and entitled to costs under Gen. St. 1902, § 4840, authorizing costs to the prevailing party. An order erasing on motion an appeal to the Supreme Court of Errors for want of jurisdiction apparent on the record does not carry costs under Gen. St. 1902, § 4840, authorizing costs to the prevailing party. Sisk v. Meagher, 74 Atl. 880, 82 Conn. 483.

A stipulation that an action in which defendant prayed affirmative relief shall be submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, and that if the defendant "prevails" a certain judgment shall be rendered, does not prevent the plaintiff from having a dismissal without prejudice, in which case the defendant, though obtaining judgment, will not have prevailed within the meaning of the stipulation. Steele v. Dye, 105 Pac. 700, 702, 81 Kan. 286.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 476, the prevailing party is entitled to costs, the "prevailing party" being regarded as that party only who has an affirmative judgment rendered in his favor on the entire case; hence where suit was brought on three money demands, and defendant showed a balance due him on one cause of action, but the plaintiff showed a greater balance due him on the other two, the plaintiff was entitled to costs. Empire State Surety Co. of New York v. Moran Bros. Co., 127 Pac. 1104, 1107, 71 Wash. 171.

Where defendant in a proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien offered judgment against him for a certain amount and accrued costs, plaintiff who succeeded in reversing a judgment for defendant, but who obtained no more favorable judgment than such offer, accomplished nothing subsequent thereto, and was not the "prevailing party," and, as it was his wrongful act in refusing the offer that made the judgment from which he appealed necessary, he was not entitled to costs on appeal. Burnett & Johnson v. Senn, 76 S. E. 820, 821, 93 S. C. 316.

Where, on foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, plaintiffs claimed $891, and rejected an offer for $500, and finally recovered $585, they are the "prevailing party," within Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 53, entitled to costs, in the discretion of the court. Salerno v. Vogt, 138 N. Y. S. 664, 665, 78 Misc. Rep. 64.

PREVAILING RATE OF WAGES

The expression "prevailing rate of wages," in Laws N. Y. 1897, c. 415, as amended by Laws 1899, cc. 192, 567, requiring municipal corporations to pay employes the "prevailing rate of wages," does not mean the wages paid by the municipality itself, but the market rate, or the rate generally prevailing in the locality for similar services to those performed by the classes of employes enumerated in the statute. Ryan v. City of New York, 79 N. Y. Supp. 599, 603, 78 App. Div. 134 (dissenting opinion of Laughlin, J.).

PREVENT

See Not to Be Prevented; Unavoidably Prevented.

The word "prevent," in a complaint alleging that defendant, operating a railroad, negligently failed to use safe and sufficient spark arresters or other proper appliances on its engine to "prevent" the emission of sparks, is used in the sense of hinder, check, or retard. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. McFall, 76 N. E. 400, 402, 165 Ind. 574.

By the word "prevented," as used in Bankr. Act, § 67b, providing that whenever a creditor is prevented from enforcing his rights as against a lien created or attempted to be created by his debtor, who afterwards becomes a bankrupt, the trustee of the estate of such bankrupt shall be subrogated to and may enforce such rights of such creditor for the benefit of the estate, is meant prevented by the supervening of bankruptcy proceedings. In re Doran, 154 Fed. 467, 471, 83 C. C. A. 265.

PREVENTIVE DEATH

The word "preventive," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2118, declaring that death by the hands of justice, either punitive or preventive, releases the insurer from the obligation of his contract, refers to a killing by an authorized officer, or a private person standing for the time being in the attitude of a public officer. Even though the killing by the husband of the paramour of the wife be under such circumstances that the law would class the act as justifiable homicide, such killing is not, at the hands of justice, either punitive or "preventive." Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Crenshaw, 58 S. E. 628-629, 129 Ga. 195, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258, 121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 12 Ann. Cas. 307.

PREVENTIVE INJUNCTION

"A mandatory injunction compels affirmative performance, while a 'preventive injunction' restrains the commission of an act." Carver v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 151 Fed. 334, 338.

"'Preventive injunctions' necessarily operate upon unperformed and unexecuted acts." Bates v. Hastings, 108 N. W. 1005, 1007, 145 Mich. 574.

PREVIOUS

PREVIOUS CHASTE CHARACTER

"It is held that, under charges of seduction, the words 'of previous chaste character' mean what a woman really is, not what she is reputed to be." They mean "actual personal virtue, in distinction from good reputation, and therefore a single act of illicit connection may be shown." "The subsequent sexual intercourse between the parties, brought about by the repetition of the same promise, cannot be deemed seduction, where, under the statutory definition of that crime, it is necessary that the female shall be of previous chaste character." Hatton v. State, 46 South. 708, 709, 92 Miss. 651 (citing 60 Am. St. Rep. 597, notes; Lyons v. State, 52 Ind. 427; People v. Nelson, 46 N. E. 1040, 153 N. Y. 90, 60 Am. St. Rep. 592).

Under a statute providing that any unmarried man seducing any unmarried female of "previous chaste character" shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, a woman was not necessarily not "chaste" because she had previously had illicit intercourse with defendant because of her affection for him and her trust in his faith. If she had previously had illicit intercourse with other men, and had made a reformation on principle, the law will even then protect her and punish her seducer. State v. Timmens, 4 Minn. 325, 334 (Gil. 241, 250).

In a prosecution for having sexual intercourse with a female under 18 years of age not accused's wife and of previous chaste character, accused cannot attack the character of the female for chastity by proof of her general reputation, but he may prove any specific act indicating a want of chastity on her part; the real issue being, not her reputation, but her actual virtuous character prior to the intercourse. Hast v. Territory, 114 Pac. 261, 265, 5 Okl. Cr. 162.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2436, punishing one who has sexual intercourse with any female child over 15 and under 18 years of age, and of previously chaste "character," the words "previously chaste character" mean only an actual physical condition, as distinguished from a chaste state of mind; and lack of chastity in prosecutrix cannot be proved, except by specific acts of unchastity; evidence of general reputation for lack of chastity being inadmissible. State v. Workman, 119 Pac. 751, 66 Wash. 292.

The word "previous," within a statute making it an offense to seduce a female of "previously chaste character," refers "to a period terminating immediately previous to the commencement of accused's guilty conduct." State v. Dacke, 109 Pac. 1050, 1052, 59 Wash. 238, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 173 (quoting and adopting a definition in Carpenter v. People [N. Y.] 8 Barb. 603).

"Chaste character," in connection with seduction, does not mean reputation, but actual personal chastity. A woman who has been at some time in her life unchaste, but who has reformed and acquired the virtue of chastity, is then a female of "previous chaste character," within Rev. Laws 1905, § 4931. State v. Preuss, 127 N. W. 438, 439, 112 Minn. 108.

PREVIOUS DECEASE

Testatrix devised a residuary estate in trust to pay the income to her brothers for life and survivor, with remainder to the issue of one of them, and provided that, on the death of the brothers leaving no issue "then living," the "then remaining" property should be divided into three parts, one part to be divided equally between three cousins, the children of an uncle, one part to be divided equally between two cousins, the children of an aunt, and one part to an uncle, and, in case of the "previous decease" of either of the cousins or of the uncle leaving issue, the share of the deceased should be paid to such issue by right of representation, and, if there were no issue "then living," the share should be divided equally among the survivors of the cousins and the uncle, or the whole to the survivor of them. The last surviving brother, both of whom died without issue, survived a cousin, a child of the aunt, who died leaving no issue, and the uncle leaving two daughters. Held, that the words "then living," "then remaining," and "previous decease" referred to the period of distribution, and testatrix intended that the survivors should be ascertained at the period of distribution, and the share of the deceased cousin must be divided equally between the four surviving cousins, to the exclusion of the children of the deceased uncle. Hall v. Hall, 95 N. E. 788, 789, 209 Mass. 350.

PREVIOUS INDEBTEDNESS

Under a policy of credit insurance making the experience of the insured in dealing with its customers a basis of credit, and providing that the highest "previous indebtedness" shall be taken as an experience which will justify the indemnified in again extending credit to an old customer, an indebtedness which has not been paid could not be called a "previous indebtedness," but would be a present indebtedness, and an experience which would justify a creditor in again extending credit to a debtor must be a satisfactory experience, and no experience could be said to be satisfactory unless the goods sold were paid for. Philadelphia Casualty Co. v. Cannon & Byers Millinery Co., 118 S. W. 1004, 1006, 133 Ky. 745.

PREVIOUS INDORSEMENTS GUARANTEED

An indorsement on a note "previous indorsements guaranteed" was only a guaranty of the genuineness of a previous indorsement, and did not render the indorser liable on the note. Johnston v. Schnabaum, 109 S. W. 1163, 1164, 86 Ark. 82, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 838, 15 Ann. Cas. 876.

PREVIOUS YEAR

The statutory limitation on the power of the county board to contract for bridge building to cost a sum not greater than the amount of money on hand in the county bridge fund derived from a levy of "previous years" and two-thirds of the levy of the "current year" gives no authority to the board to take into account the levy of the "current calendar year" prior to the making of such levy. Until it is made, there is no "levy of the current year." Ordinarily the terms "this year," "the current year," or "the previous year" mean in each instance the calendar year in which the event under discussion took place and the one before it, but the Legislature did not have this meaning in putting the words into this statute. Clark v. Lancaster County, 96 N. W. 593, 599, 69 Neb. 717.

PREVIOUSLY ASCERTAINED BY LAW

Where, after the commission of an alleged crime in a federal district, the division of the district in which it was committed is changed by the creation of a new division therefrom, the district as "previously ascertained by law," within the meaning of the sixth constitutional amendment, which constitutes the vicinage from which the jury must be drawn for the trial of the accused, comprises the division as it stood before the change. United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 776.

PREVIOUSLY DIED

Where testator gave the remainder to the issue of his two daughters, naming each, and to his three sons, naming each, "or to the issue of either of said sons, if they shall have previously died leaving issue," he evidently meant by the word "previously" a death during the continuance of the trust, and not during his own life. Until the trust ended he did not intend that his residuary estate should vest so that it could be sold and squandered. People's Trust Co. v. Flynn, 80 N. E. 1098, 1101, 188 N. Y. 385.

PRICE

See Billed Prices; Contract Price; Cost Price; Current Market Price; Fair and Reasonable Price; Fair Price; Inadequate Price; Long Price; Market Price; Present Prices; Purchase Price; Quotation of Prices; Reasonable Price; Satisfactory Price; Short Price; Wholesale Price.

"Price" primarily signifies the sum which the seller will receive in exchange, and implies a mental operation requiring the exercise of memory and calculation, and the term "price scale" would not be free from objection if appropriated as a trade-mark. Computing Scale Co. v. Standard Computing Scale Co., 118 Fed. 965, 969, 55 C. C. A. 450.

The word "price," in the rule that a court of equity will not extend its aid except on equitable terms imposed as the "price" of the decree, means the thing exacted of one party and given to the other in order to do equity. State ex rel. Heddens v. Rusk, 139 S. W. 199, 203, 236 Mo. 201.

The balance of account between a debtor and creditor is not the "price" of the property accepted in settlement thereof, as that word is used in an ordinary purchase and sale. It is more nearly correct to say that the property is the price of the settlement, and if, for any reason, the party making the delivery has good ground for repudiating the settlement so made, the utmost of his recovery will be the property itself or its fair market value. Johnson v. Saum, 114 N. W. 618, 619, 137 Iowa, 138.

Where plaintiff agreed to sell defendant his interest in certain railroad land for $250 and a further sum of $48.30, and to lend defendant and another $100, and defendant promised to pay $250, and that, if he left before paying that amount, the property should go to plaintiff when he paid the "price of the land" that defendant bought from the railroad for $51.50, the price of the land referred to, if not uncertain, may be considered as including not only the $51.50 paid to the railroad company but also the $48.30 paid to plaintiff, together with defendant's written promise to pay the $250, so that plaintiff, on a tender of $51.50, was not entitled to a reconveyance. Raymond v. Laboudigue, 84 Pac. 189, 190, 148 Cal. 691.

As rent

See Rent.

As value

The word "price" is not synonymous with "value," the primary meaning of the latter word being "worth," but "market value" and "market price" are frequently used alike. Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Parsons, 32 Pac. 1083, 1084, 51 Kan. 408.

Though, strictly, "price" tokens agreement on a value by parties in interest, while "value" is, as a rule, the general estimate of the pecuniary equivalent of the subject of inquiry, the terms "worth," "price," and "value" may be treated as synonymous in determining the damages for breach by the buyer of a contract of sale. Scruggs & Echols v. Riddle, 54 South. 641, 645, 171 Ala. 350.

Under defendant's contract to pay plaintiff, on sale of a mine, a part of the net price received, plaintiff is entitled to such proportion of the stock of a company for which it is sold, as "price" does not necessarily mean value in money. Kinard v. Jordan, 101 Pac. 696, 698, 10 Cal. App. 219 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5547).

PRICES CURRENT AND COMMERCIAL LISTS

Circular letters sent out at different times by the secretary of a cotton seed association, containing the prices of cotton seed oil, are not "prices current and commercial lists," within Code 1896, § 1810, providing that "prices current or commercial lists" printed at any commercial mart are presumptive evidence of the value of any merchandise specified therein, and a witness should not be permitted to examine them and testify from them as to the prices of cotton seed oil. Kentucky Refining Co. v. Conner, 39 South. 728, 729, 145 Ala. 664 (citing Tyson v. Chestnut, 24 South. 73, 118 Ala. 387).

PRICES F. O. B.

The language "prices f. o. b." is not synonymous with "delivery f. o. b." nor with "f. o. b." standing by itself. A contract whereby a coal company agreed to furnish to defendant all the coal that might be required by the latter for the use of an illuminating company "of Detroit," for certain purposes at "the following 'prices f. o. b.' Michigan Central Railroad," to wit, etc., required the delivery of the coal on the track of such railroad company at Detroit. Detroit Southern R. Co. v. Malcolmson, 107 N. W. 915, 916, 144 Mich. 172, 115 Am. St. Rep. 390.

PRIMA FACIE

"Prima facie" means at first view, and so the statement that flight is a circumstance which prima facie is an indication of guilt means nothing more than that at first view flight suggests guilt. State v. Richards, 102 N. W. 439, 441, 126 Iowa, 497.

"Prima facie" just, reasonable, and correct in section 22, art. 9 (section 235, Bunn's Ed.; Snyder's Ed. p. 259), of the Constitution, is a presumption arising upon the finding of the Corporation Commission that the order based upon such facts is presumed on appeal in this court to be just, reasonable, and correct, subject to be overcome or rebutted by the facts in the record as weighed and found by this court in reviewing the same. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 100 Pac. 11, 15, 16, 23 Okl. 210, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 908.

The term "prima facie," in relation to assignments of salary, is equivalent to the word apparent. State ex rel. State Bank v. Hastings, 15 Wis. 75, 84.

PRIMA FACIE CASE

"A 'prima facie case' is that which is received or continues until the contrary is shown." Gilpin v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 94 S. W. 869, 871, 197 Mo. 319; McCombs v. State, 99 S. W. 1017, 1018, 50 Tex. Cr. R.

490, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, 123 Am. St. Rep. 855, 14 Ann. Cas. 72.

"A 'prima facie case' is one which is established by evidence and can be overthrown only by rebutting evidence adduced on the other side." Gilpin v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 94 S. W. 869, 871, 197 Mo. 319 (quoting 2 Abb. Law Dict. 312).

A "prima facie case" is only evidence, stronger than ordinary proof, which the party against whom it is raised is not bound to overthrow by the greater weight of evidence, but which, if he fails to introduce proof to overcome it, will be sufficient to sustain an adverse verdict, though not conclusive. Brock v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 72 S. E. 213, 215, 156 N. C. 112.

The filing of an affidavit of forgery against a document casts on the party claiming thereunder the burden of proving its execution as at common law, so that, when the party claiming under it has "prima facie" established the instrument, the attacking party may proceed to sustain the plea of non est factum by any lawful testimony. Crosby v. Ardoin (Tex.) 145 S. W. 709, 713 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5549).

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE

"Prima facie evidence" of a fact is such evidence as in the judgment of the law is sufficient to establish the fact, and, if not rebutted, remains sufficient for that purpose." Gilpin v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. 94 S. W. 869, 871, 197 Mo. 319 (quoting and adopting the definition in Smith v. Burrus, 16 S. W. 881, 106 Mo. 100, 13 L. R. A. 39, 27 Am. St. Rep. 329); Meador v. Johnson, 112 Pac. 1121, 27 Okl. 544.

"Prima facie evidence" means evidence which is sufficient to establish the fact unless rebutted; evidence which, standing alone and unexplained, would maintain the proposition and warrant the conclusion to support which it is introduced. La Fitte v. City of Ft. Collins, 93 Pac. 1098, 1099, 42 Colo. 293; McCombs v. State, 99 S. W. 1017, 1018, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 490, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, 123 Am. St. Rep. 855, 14 Ann. Cas. 72.

By "prima facie" is meant that, if nothing more appeared, the evidence offered would, without contradiction, be taken as sufficient. Foss v. McRae, 73 Atl. 827, 828, 105 Me. 140.

"Prima facie proof" or evidence is that which, standing alone, unexplained or uncontradicted, is sufficient to maintain the proposition affirmed, and if not rebutted remains sufficient for that purpose. People ex rel. Sanders v. Cairo, V. & C. Ry. Co., 94 N. E. 11, 12, 249 Ill. 97.

"Prima facie evidence," once in a case, stands there all through the trial, and must be given its full probative force, unless stricken out, but may be overcome by evdence given in explanation or contradiction. It is never overcome by the mere silence of the party who has offered it, for he has no occasion to speak further, or by the failure to produce further supporting evidence, for that is not necessary, or by the mere weakness of additional or further evidence introduced in support of such prima facie case. If a prima facie case is made by the proof of certain facts, and other facts are also proved which tend to support that case, but which facts, standing alone, would not make it out, the prima facie case is not weakened. Nor is a prima facie case weakened by evidence intended to support or strengthen it, but which does not, provided such evidence does not contradict or impeach the prima facie case." United States v. Green, 138 Fed. 618, 631, 632.

"Prima facie evidence" is that degree of proof which, unexplained or uncontradicted, is alone sufficient to establish the truth of a legal principle asserted by a party. State v. Kline, 93 Pac. 237, 240, 50 Or. 426 (citing 1 Jones, Ev. § 7).

"Prima facie evidence" means sufficient evidence upon which a party would be entitled to recover if his opponent produced no evidence. Peters v. Lohr, 124 N. W. 853, 855, 24 S. D. 605.

"Prima facie evidence" means simply that evidence which is sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to warrant a judgment or the direction of the court for recovery in favor of a person having possession. Amos-Richia v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 152 Fed. 192, 193.

"'Prima facie evidence' is that degree of proof which, if unchallenged, is sufficient in law to establish a relevant fact." State v. Martin, 83 Pac. 849, 852, 47 Or. 282, 8 Ann. Cas. 769.

The law does not attach the presumption of guilt to any given circumstance, nor does it require the accused to overcome the presumption thereby raised in order to be entitled to an acquittal. What the law does say is that the fact of possession is evidence of guilt, upon which a conviction may properly be returned, unless the other facts or circumstances developed be such that, notwithstanding the recent possession, the jury still entertains a reasonable doubt of the defendant's participation in the crime. It is in this sense that the words "presumption" and "prima facie evidence" must be understood, when employed in this connection. State v. Brady, 97 N. W. 62, 64, 121 Iowa, 561, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 190.

"'Prima facie evidence' may be said to be such as in law is regarded as sufficient to entitle a party to a recovery until it is fairly overcome by rebutting proof." 1 Greenleaf on Evidence (14th Ed.) p. 104, note, states that "in civil cases, when the plaintiff has introduced sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case, he may rest on his proof, and it becomes the duty of the defendant to introduce evidence to rebut the case made by the plaintiff." Porter v. Valentine, 41 N. Y. Supp. 507, 510, 18 Misc. Rep. 213.

"Prima facie evidence," in legal intentment, means evidence which, if un rebutted or unexplained, is sufficient to maintain the proposition and warrant the conclusion to support which it has been introduced; but a prima facie case, when made out, does not, either necessarily or usually, change the burden of proof. Carroll v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 86 N. E. 793, 797, 200 Mass. 527.

"Prima facie evidence" is that which, not being inconsistent with the falsity of the hypothesis, nevertheless raises such a degree of probability in its favor that it must prevail if it be accredited by the jury, unless it be rebutted or the contrary be proved. When a plaintiff has fulfilled the burden of proof laid upon him, and no facts in evidence show that the plaintiff's testimony cannot be true, the court is warranted in directing a verdict in his favor. Polhemus v. Prudential Realty Corp., 67 Atl. 303, 308, 74 N. J. Law, 570 (citing Starkie, Ev. [9th Am. Ed.; 4th Eng. Ed.] 819; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Toffey, 38 N. J. Law, 525, 529; Fifth Ward Sav. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 7 Atl. 318, 321, 48 N. J. Law, 513, 518; Baumann v. Hamb. Amer. Packet Co., 51 Atl. 461, 462, 67 N. J. Law, 250, 252, 253, and quoting and adopting definition given in Kelly v. Jackson ex dem. Morris, 31 U. S. [6 Pet.] 622, 632, 8 L. Ed. 523).

By the term "prima facie evidence or presumption" is meant such evidence as answers the legal requirements of proof, authorizing a submission of the question to the jury, and it does not follow that, in case counter-vailing proof is put in evidence, the court is warranted in withdrawing the case from the jury. State v. Forbes, 73 Atl. 929, 930, 75 N. H. 306, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 302 (citing King v. Hopkins, 57 N. H. 334, 359; 4 Wig. Ev. §§ 2494, 2513).

Where a statute, such as section 3, c. 15, of the 1911 Session Laws (Sess. Laws 1911, p. 32), provides that, when the possession of intoxicating liquors is shown, such fact is "prima facie evidence that such intoxicating liquors are kept for sale," the statute means that such prima facie presumption or prima facie evidence is sufficient to go to the jury to prove such facts, and that such possession will be sufficient to support a verdict on that particular fact; but it does not mean that such evidence is conclusive and binding upon the jury, and that it is their duty to bring in a verdict against the defendant, where such a prima facie case only is made, and it is error to instruct a jury that under such circumstances they should bring in a verdict of guilty. State v. Adams, 128 Pac. 401, 402, 22 Idaho, 485.

In an instruction that if accused unlawfully and intentionally hit deceased in the head with a pistol and killed him, though he did not intend to kill, yet he is prima facie guilty of murder in the second degree, the words "prima facie" "import that the evidence produces for the time being a certain result; but that the result may be repelled. They import that there is a presumption of guilt arising from the facts supposed in the instruction, but they do not import that the result is conclusive beyond any showing to the contrary." State v. Stover, 63 S. E. 315, 64 W. Va. 668.

Under the rule that the Legislature may prescribe that a fact shall be prima facie evidence of a certain other fact, where it has a tendency to prove the other fact, the provision of Laws 1907, p. 297, providing for the creation by popular vote of antisaloon territory, that proof of the issuance of an internal revenue stamp shall be prima facie evidence of the sale of intoxicating liquor by the person to whom it is issued, etc., is not invalid as overturning the doctrine of reasonable doubt in criminal cases; the term "prima facie evidence" implying evidence which may be rebutted and overcome, and the provision merely establishing a rule of evidence. People v. McBride, 84 N. E. 865, 870, 234 Ill. 146, 123 Am. St. Rep. 82, 14 Ann. Cas. 994.

The statute, in declaring that the possession of the United States revenue receipt or license for the sale of liquors shall be "prima facie evidence" that the holder is selling and keeping liquor for sale, "means that such evidence is competent and sufficient to justify a jury in finding a defendant guilty, provided it does in fact satisfy them of his guilt beyond reasonable doubt, and not otherwise." State v. Momberg, 103 N. W. 566, 567, 14 N. D. 291.

A diagram is not "prima facie evidence" of any fact or object represented by it. Carman v. Montana Cent. R. Co., 79 Pac. 690, 692, 32 Mont. 137 (quoting People v. Cochran, 61 Cal. 548).

Recent possession of stolen property, the proceeds of a robbery or burglary, is "prima facie evidence" of the possessor's guilt. People v. Deluce, 86 N. E. 1080, 1081, 237 Ill. 541.

The commissioner's deed of land forfeited for taxes is "prima facie evidence" of title which is sufficient to establish the title in the grantee therein in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Morris v. Breedlove, 116 S. W. 223, 89 Ark. 296 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5549, 5550).

"Prima facie evidence" is such as in the judgment of the law is sufficient to establish the fact, and, if unrebutted, remains sufficient for that purpose. The statutes having made the probate of wills conclusive as to personalty and "prima facie evidence" of the validity of wills as to real property, the manner of execution and of attestation of a will admitted to probate cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding. Thomas v. Williams, 40 South. 831, 833, 51 Fla. 332 (quoting and adopting definition in 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5549).

The term "prima facie evidence," within Comp. Laws 1907, § 4355, which provides that possession of property recently stolen, when the possessor fails to make satisfactory explanation, shall be deemed prima facie evidence of guilt, means "presumptive" evidence, the term not meaning that, unless rebutted by other evidence or discredited by circumstances, the proof becomes conclusive as to guilt. State v. Potello (Utah) 119 Pac. 1023, 1027.

PRIMA FACIE LIABILITY

We therefore adopt what is known as the "rule of prima facie liability." All losses of property incurred by guests at a public hotel or inn by fire are prima facie due to the negligence of the proprietor, but he may discharge and relieve himself from liability by showing that the loss happened by an irresistible force or unavoidable accident, such as a fire originating upon premises over which he had no control, without fault or negligence on his part. This doctrine does not infringe upon the common-law rule, which makes him responsible for all thefts from within his house, or unexplained, whether committed by guests, servants, or strangers, upon the general principle that an innkeeper guarantees the good behavior of all who may be under his roof, particularly his servants. Johnson v. Chadbourn Finance Co., 94 N. W. 874, 876, 89 Minn. 310, 99 Am. St. Rep. 571.

PRIMA FACIE VALID

An entry on public land is "prima facie valid" when it is valid on the face of the record. Holt v. Classen, 91 Pac. 866, 868, 19 Okl. 131 (adopting definition in McMichael v. Murphy, 25 Sup. Ct. 460, 197 U. S. 304, 49 L. Ed. 766).

PRIMARY—PRIMARILY

See Closed Primary.

Suffrage at primary, see Suffrage.

The words "primary and direct," as contrasted with "secondary," when spoken of an obligation, refer to the remedy provided by law for enforcing the same rather than to the character and limits of the obligation. Rouse v. Wooten, 53 S. E. 430, 432, 140 N. C. 557, 111 Am. St. Rep. 875, 6 Ann.

Cas. 280 (quoting Kilton v. Tool Co., 48 Atl. 1039, 22 R. I. 611).

PRIMARYLY LIABLE

Neg. Inst. Act (Pub. Laws 1896-1900, p. 84, c. 674) art. 1, § 3, provides that the person "primarily" liable on an instrument is the person who, by the terms thereof, is absolutely required to pay the same, and that all other parties are "secondarily" liable. Article 6, § 71, provides that a person placing his signature on an instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer, or acceptor is deemed to be an indorser, unless he clearly indicates his intention to be bound in some other capacity. Article 8, § 97, provides that where a negotiable instrument has been dishonored, if notice of dishonor is not given to an indorser, he shall be discharged. Held, that persons who placed their signatures on the back of a note before delivery for the accommodation of the maker were indorsers, and could not be held as joint makers on the ground that the holder would not have taken the note without their signatures. Deahy v. Choquet, 67 Atl. 421, 422, 28 R. I. 338, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 847.

The word "primarily," in Laws 1896, p. 220, c. 272, § 22, providing that a married woman may cause the life of her husband to be insured and be entitled to receive insurance money as her separate property, free from any claim of creditors of her husband except that, where the premium actually paid annually out of the husband's property exceeds $500, that portion of the insurance purchased by the excess of the premium over $500 is "primarily" liable for the husband's debts, means first in order of payment, and the liability created is wholly statutory, and under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2472, 2481, 2596, 2712, 2731, describing the general jurisdiction and powers of the surrogate's court, providing for the issuance of letters, specifically declaring what shall be deemed assets of an estate, etc., a surrogate has no jurisdiction of a proceeding by a creditor of a deceased husband to compel the wife, as executrix, to account for the excess of life insurance purchased by the portion of annual premiums in excess of $500. In re Thompson, 76 N. E. 870, 872, 184 N. Y. 36.

The liability of a guarantor is based on the terms of his contract, which is distinct from the terms of the instrument on which it is indorsed, and he does not agree to make the debt his own, but only to answer on his principal's default, and his contract, while it may require him to pay the note, is secondary within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6494, providing the terms for the release of a person secondarily liable. The terms "primarily liable" and "secondarily liable," as used in Rev. Codes 1905, § 6494, have reference to the remedy provided for enforcing the obligation of one signing a negotiable instrument, rather than to the character of the obligation, and the remedy against a guarantor is not primary and direct, but collateral and secondary. Northern State Bank of Grand Forks v. Bellamy, 125 N. W. 888, 889, 19 N. D. 509, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149.

Under the negotiable instruments law (Laws 1899, pp. 127, 130, 131, 137, 138, 147, c. 83, §§ 29, 60, 63, 119, 120, 192), defining an accommodation maker, making him liable to a holder for value, providing that a negotiable instrument is discharged by payment, etc., and that a person secondarily liable on the instrument is discharged by any act which will discharge a simple contract for the payment of money, etc., and defining a person "primarily liable" as one who by the terms of the instrument is absolutely required to pay the same, etc., an accommodation maker of a note is not relieved from liability by an extension of time of payment without his knowledge or consent. Wolstenholme v. Smith, 97 Pac. 329, 331, 34 Utah, 300.

Under L. O. L. § 5862, defining an "accommodation maker" as one who has signed a negotiable instrument without receiving value, but providing that such person is liable to a holder for value, notwithstanding the holder knew him to be only an accommodation party, and section 6023, defining a person "primarily liable" as one who is absolutely required to pay a negotiable instrument, and sections 5952, 5953, providing for the discharge of a negotiable instrument by payment, and that a person secondarily liable shall be discharged by indulgence of the maker, an accommodation maker is primarily liable, and is not discharged, notwithstanding an indulgence to parties secondarily liable. Murphy v. Panter, 125 Pac. 292, 294, 62 Or. 522.

PRIMARY AND GRAMMAR SCHOOLS

Const. art. 9, § 5, requires the Legislature to provide for a system of "common schools" by which a free school shall be supported in each district. Section 6 provides that the "public school system" shall include "primary and grammar schools," and such high schools, evening schools, etc., as may be established by legislative or local authority, and further provides that the entire revenue derived from the state school fund shall be applied exclusively to the support of the "primary and grammar schools." Pol. Code, §§ 1622, 1861, reiterate the requirement that the revenue of the state school fund shall be applied solely to primary and grammar schools. Section 1532 requires the superintendent of public instruction to apportion the balance of the state school fund which remains after providing for teachers to the several counties according to their "average daily attendance," as shown by reports of the county superintendents for the preceding year. Sections 1617, 1662, and 1663 recognize and make certain provisions relative to the adoption of kindergartens as part of the "public primary schools" in cities and towns. Held that, notwithstanding the legislative designation of kindergartens as "primary" schools, such institutions are not "primary and grammar schools," within the meaning of the constitutional and statutory provisions for the distribution of the state school fund, and the kindergarten attendance is not to be computed in ascertaining the proportion of the school fund to which a county is entitled. Los Angeles County v. Kirk, 83 Pac. 250, 253, 148 Cal. 385.

PRIMARY BATTERY

A "primary battery" is one in which chemical action takes place directly to produce electromotive force, while in a "secondary battery" the electromotive force is produced by a chemical action set up after a current of electricity has been passed through the cell for some time. Secondary batteries are commonly called "storage batteries." In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 183 Fed. 160, 165.

PRIMARY BOYCOTT

An organized union of employes may, by concerted action, cease dealing, either socially or in a business way, with a former employer, and this act is a "primary boycott," and such employes may, by fair oral or written persuasion, induce others interested in, or sympathetic with, their cause to withdraw their social intercourse and business patronage from the employer, and they may request another to withdraw his patronage from the employer, and may use the moral coercion of threatening a like boycott against him if he refuses to do so, and the latter act is the "secondary boycott," but any act which passes beyond moral suasion, and plays by intimidation on physical fears, is unlawful, and will be restrained by injunction. Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8760, 103 Pac. 325, 327, 156 Cal. 70.

PRIMARY ELECTION

As election, see Elect—Elected—Election.

As public election, see Public Election.
Regulation of as within police power, see Police Power.

"Such a thing as a 'primary' was not known at common law. It is the outgrowth of modern convenience or necessity. The 'primary' is not an election in the sense of the common law. It is merely a method for the selection of persons to be balloted for at such an election. Prior to our primary acts, the primary had no legal status whatever. All it has now is statutory, and all the penalties for its violation must be found in the statute." But, despite the statutory character of the "primary" and the fact that election frauds therein were not offenses at common law, a conspiracy to influence the result of a primary is an offense under the common law. State v. Bienstock, 73 Atl. 530, 537, 78 N. J. Law, 256 (quoting and adopting the definition in State v. Woodruff, 52 Atl. 294, 68 N. J. Law, 89).

A "primary election," which is defined in Rev. St. 1899, § 7082, to be an "election held within the state, county, district, or subdivision thereof by the members of any political party for the purpose of nominating candidates for office," is not an "election authorized by the Constitution and laws of the state," within section 3430, declaring bets on such an election to be gaming, and section 3421 authorizing an action to recover money bet thereon from a stakeholder. Dooley v. Jackson, 78 S. W. 330, 332, 104 Mo. App. 21.

The word "election," as used in Const. § 6, declaring that all elections shall be free and equal, does not apply to primary elections, which are not in fact elections of officers, but merely a means of selecting candidates, so that the Primary Election Law is not in violation of the Constitution. Hodge v. Bryan, 148 S. W. 21, 22, 149 Ky. 110.

"The words 'primary election,' we may say, are well understood to mean the act of choosing candidates of the respective political parties to fill the various offices." State ex rel. Brady v. Bates, 112 N. W. 1025, 1028, 102 Minn. 104, 12 Ann. Cas. 105 (quoting State v. Hirsch, 24 N. E. 1062, 125 Ind. 207, 9 L. R. A. 170).

A "primary election," although not an election in the sense of the common law, has been treated as such by our statutory law and in common parlance. Heath v. Rotherham, 77 Atl. 520, 521, 79 N. J. Law, 22.

A "primary election" is merely a substitute for a convention, and the only thing accomplished by it is that of selecting candidates for the several parties whose names shall go on the official ballot for the general election. Lansdon v. State Board of Canvassers, 111 Pac. 133, 136, 18 Idaho, 596.

"Section 121 of the Constitution prescribes the qualifications for voters at 'any election.' It is true that, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, a primary election law was unknown in this state, but Constitution makers are not presumed to foresee and take into consideration every new condition which may arise or every new remedy which may be devised for application to old conditions. Constitutions do not deal in details. They comprise general principles and general directions which are intended to apply to all new facts and conditions which may come into being, and which may be brought within the terms of these general principles or directions, and, when the Constitution says 'any election' in prescribing the qualifications of voters, it does not mean simply any election then known to the people of the state. It means, not only any election then provided for by the laws and Constitution, but any election which may thereafter be established or required to be held pursuant to law, and therefore includes a 'primary election.' Johnson v. Grand Forks County, 113 N. W. 1071, 1073, 16 N. D. 363, 125 Am. St. Rep. 662.

A "primary election" is not an election to public office. It is merely the selection of candidates for office by the members of a political party in a manner having the form of an election. Line v. Board of Election Canvassers of Menominee County, 117 N. W. 730, 731, 154 Mich. 329, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, 16 Ann. Cas. 248.

The expression "primary election" denotes an election by ballot by some party, organization, or association for nominating candidates for public office. Norton v. State, 68 S. E. 662, 666, 5 Ga. App. 586.

A "primary election" is one for the nomination of candidates of the various parties. Riter v. Douglass, 109 Pac. 444, 453, 32 Nev. 400.

"The primary election" is really a number of primary elections equal to the number of parties participating, but conducted at the same time and at the same polling places by one set of public officers, acting in behalf of all the parties desiring to elect delegates to their respective conventions. Therefore, when an elector desires to register in a manner which will entitle him to vote at the primary election, he must be understood as desiring to act with some party, and not with any other party. The registrar is for this purpose the agent of the several parties, and is making up a list of voters for each one of them." Pol. Code, § 1366a, provides that, in all places where the primary election law is in force, each elector, at the time of registering or time of transferring registration, shall declare his party affiliation, and, if he refuses to do so, he shall not vote at the ensuing primary; and section 1361a empowers the several political parties to prescribe additional tests if they desire so to do for those who offer to vote for delegates to their respective conventions. Held, that such sections were not in conflict nor objectionable, as violating Const. art. 2, § 2½, empowering the Legislature to provide for and regulate primary elections as constituting a partial exercise and a partial delegation of such power. Pol. Code, § 1366a, requiring each elector, in precincts where the primary election law is in force, to declare, at the time of registering or transferring registration, his party affiliation as a condition to his right to participate in the primary, is not void as a violation of Const. art. 2, § 1, in that it in effect provides an additional qualification to those prescribed therein for electors, nor is it void for unreasonableness, in that an elector changing his party affiliation after his registration and before the primary election would be precluded from voting with his new party. Schostag v. Cator, 91 Pac. 502, 503, 151 Cal. 600.

Article 3, §§ 1, 4a, and 7 (§§ 42, 46, and 49, Williams' Const.), prescribing the qualifications of electors and guaranteeing their right to vote, applies to the election of public officers, and not to the selection of party nominees at a primary election. A "primary election" is one for the nomination of candidates of the respective political parties by the members thereof. Ex parte Wilson, 125 Pac. 739, 746, 7 Okl. Cr. 610.

PRIMARY EVIDENCE.

"Primary evidence" is that kind of evidence which, under every possible circumstance, affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question. Thus a written instrument is itself the best possible evidence of its existence and contents." Capell v. Fagan, 77 Pac. 55, 30 Mont. 507, 2 Ann. Cas. 37 (quoting the definition in Code Civ. Proc. § 3106).

Under a statute defining "primary evidence" as that which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted, declaring that a seal affixed to a writing is primary evidence, and that an agreement without a seal for the settlement of a controversy is as obligatory as if a seal were affixed, an instrument under seal may be attacked at law for fraud in the consideration as well as for fraud in the execution, since a seal is only prima facie evidence of a consideration. Olston v. Oregon Water Power & Ry. Co., 96 Pac. 1095, 1098, 52 Or. 343, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915.

Where, in an action for work and materials, defendant pleaded a judgment in a former action involving the items sued for, plaintiff and his attorney present at the former trial were competent to testify as to the testimony of the former trial, and as to an amendment to the complaint therein, so as to withdraw the claims sued for; such evidence being primary. Dickman v. MacDonald, 99 N. Y. Supp. 429, 430, 50 Misc. Rep. 531 (citing Weinhandler v. Brewing Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 792, 46 Misc. Rep. 584).

Pol. Code, § 3785, provides that a tax collector's deed shall be primary evidence that the taxes were not paid. Held, that the word "primary" was used in the sense of prima facie; and hence the presumption of nonpayment arising from such deed may be rebutted by proof that the taxes were in fact paid. Boyer v. Gelhaus, 125 Pac. 916, 918, 19 Cal. App. 320.

PRIMARY FRANCHISE

The right or privilege to be a corporation is a franchise, often called a "primary franchise." The secondary franchise or right of making use of the purchased privilege, which the books denominate the "franchise to do," is entirely distinct and separate from the franchise to be or to exist here as a corporation. American Smelting & Refining Co. v. People ex rel. Lindsley, 82 Pac. 531, 534, 84 Colo. 240.

PRIMARY INVENTIONS AND PATENTS

"A 'primary invention' is one which performs a function never performed by any earlier invention, while a 'secondary invention' is one which performs a function previously performed by some earlier invention, but in a substantially different way from any that preceded it." The Supreme Court of the United States has defined the legal distinctions flowing from this diversity as follows: "Where an invention is one of a primary character, and the mechanical functions performed by the machine are, as a whole, entirely new, all subsequent machines, which employ substantially the same means to accomplish the same result, are infringements, although the subsequent machine may contain improvements in the separate mechanisms which go to make up the machine." Secondary patents should receive a construction narrower than that given to primary patents. Von Eberstein v. Chambliss, 166 Fed. 463, 468, 469 (quoting and adopting definitions in Walker, Patents, 313, and Morley Sewing Machine Co. v. Lancaster, 9 Sup. Ct. 299, 302, 129 U. S. 273, 32 L. Ed. 715).

The distinction between "primary and secondary patents" is now given less force than formerly by the courts, for every patent may be regarded as primary within its field; and it follows, then, that every patent should have as broad an interpretation as the courts may fairly give it and as full and fair a use of the doctrine of equivalents as the courts may fairly allow it. Kip-Armstrong Co. v. King Philip Mills, 130 Fed. 28, 31.

PRIMARY RIGHT

The term "primary right," used as a designation of that which, when violated, will constitute a ground for judicial redress, may in an equitable action include other rights which are also primary in the sense that they might constitute separate grounds of complaint, but which, by reason of their relation to the dominant purpose of the suit, are deemed to be embodied therein. Emerson v. Nash, 102 N. W. 921, 927, 124 Wis. 369, 70 L. R. A. 326, 109 Am. St. Rep. 944.

PRIME

In an action for a broker's commission, where the court had given instructions covering every phase of the case, it was error to instruct that, before plaintiff could recover, he must show by the greater weight of the evidence that he was the "prime cause" of the purchase, as the jury might infer from the use of the word "prime" that the cause must be first in order of time, original, and that something more definite was meant than was included in the other instruction as to "procuring" cause. S. J. Cox Real Estate Co. v. French, 142 S. W. 449, 450, 160 Mo. App. 678.

PRINCES

See Restraints of Kings or Princes.

PRINCIPAL

See Vice Principal.

The word "principal" means main, chief, leading, highest in value, character or importance, most considerable or important. Kelly v. Burgess, 115 Pac. 583, 584, 84 Kan. 678.

The word "principal," as used in Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 3320, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 1921, c. 755, declaring that two or more trustees of an express trust are entitled to certain commissions to be apportioned among them, and, where the value of the principal of the trust estate or fund equals or exceeds $100,000, each trustee is entitled to full commissions on "principal" and on income of each year to which a sole trustee is entitled, unless the trustees are more than three, means the fund which is to be paid over, either in cash or its equivalent in securities, and hence did not include real property. Chisolm v. Hamersley, 100 N. Y. Supp. 38, 41, 114 App. Div. 565.

In criminal law

All participants in the commission of a misdemeanor are "principals." Richardson v. United States, 181 Fed. 1, 5, 104 C. C. A. 69.

Those who are present aiding, commanding, or abetting are deemed "principals." United States v. Young & Holland Co., 170 Fed. 110, 113 (citing United States v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. [25 U. S.] 460, 472, 6 L. Ed. 693).

All who are present aiding and abetting in the commission of a misdemeanor are "principals." State v. Hunter, 60 S. E. 240, 79 S. C. 73; Southern Express Co. v. State, 64 S. E. 341, 342, 6 Ga. App. 31; State v. Rowland Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 53, 59, 153 N. C. 610.

There are no accessories in misdemeanors, but all who participate in any way in the unlawful act are "principal" offenders. Burrow v. City of Hot Springs, 108 S. W. 823, 827, 85 Ark. 396; People v. Acritelli, 110 N. Y. Supp. 430, 440, 57 Misc. Rep. 574; Loeb v. State, 64 S. E. 338, 340, 6 Ga. App. 23.

Every person concerned in the commission of a crime, whether directly committing the acts constituting the offense or aiding or abetting or advising or encouraging its commission, is a "principal." People v. Bunkers, 84 Pac. 364, 367, 2 Cal. App. 197.

Under the express provisions of Pen. Code, § 29, a person concerned in the commission of a crime, whether he directly commits the criminal act or aids and abets in its commission, is a "principal." People v. Kellogg, 94 N. Y. Supp. 617, 621, 105 App. Div. 505.

All persons who are concerned in the commission of an offense are guilty as "principals," and should be prosecuted and convicted as such. Bowes v. State, 127 Pac. 883, 888, 8 Okl. Cr. 277.

All persons are "principals" in the commission of a crime who are guilty of acting together therein, and any person who advises or agrees to the commission of an offense and is present at its commission is a principal thereto, whether he aids or not in the commission of the illegal act. Sheppard v. State, 140 S. W. 1090, 1091, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 569.

Each person present, consenting to the commission of an offense, and doing any act which is an ingredient or immediately connected with it, or leading to its commission, is a "principal" to the same extent as if he committed the whole crime. McCoy v. State, 44 South. 814, 817, 91 Miss. 257.

Code Ala. 1895, § 4308, abolishes the common-law distinction between accessories before the fact and the "principals" in a felony, and makes guilty as principals all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid or abet in its commission, though not present. Ferguson v. State, 37 South. 448, 450, 141 Ala. 20.

An instruction to the effect that all persons guilty of acting together in the commission of an offense are "principals," and that if one actually commits an offense, and another is present, and, knowing the unlawful purpose, aids the commission of the offense by acts, or encourages it by words or gestures, he is a principal offender, is correct. Parks v. State (Tex.) 79 S. W. 537.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 74, makes all persons "principals" who are guilty of acting together in the commission of an offense. Article 75 provides that when an offense is actually committed by one or more, but others are present, and knowing the unlawful intent, aid by acts, or encourage by words or gestures, those actually engaged in the commission of the unlawful act, or who, not being actually present, keep watch so as to prevent the interruption of those committing the offense, the persons aiding, encouraging or keeping watch, are "principals." Held, that two or more who act together with an unlawful intent and common design in committing an offense are each guilty as prin-

All persons who participate in an offense are guilty as "principals," and it is immaterial whether they have any interest in any financial gain from the commission of the crime. Buchanan v. State, 112 Pac. 32, 34, 4 Okl. Cr. 645, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 83.

All persons are "principals" who are concerned in the commission of a criminal offense, whether they profit by the commission of such offense or not. Morris v. State, 111 Pac. 1096, 4 Okl. Cr. 233.

Comp. Laws 1909, § 2045, provides that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether a felony or a misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, are "principals." Held that, to constitute one a party to a crime under the statutes, it is necessary that he be concerned in the commission of the offense, either committing it himself or procuring it to be done by aiding or abetting its commission, and it is not sufficient that he merely acquiesced therein. Moore v. State, 111 Pac. 822, 823, 4 Okl. Cr. 212.

Where several persons threw stones at a train at the same time and place, they were each liable without proof of a conspiracy, though some of them threw stones at one car and some at another, for proof of conspiracy is necessary only to fix liability on members of a mob who are present, but not shown to have committed the illegal act complained of. State v. Holder, 69 S. E. 66, 67, 153 N. C. 606.

All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act or aid and abet, though not present, are "principals," under Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 2045. Greenwood v. State, 105 Pac. 371, 372, 3 Okl. Cr. 247.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1560, defining an "accessory" as one who stands by, aids, abets, or assists, or one who, not being present, has advised and encouraged a crime, and section 1561, making such a person a principal, and at common law, all persons concerned in a crime, less than a felony, are "principals." Strong v. State, 114 S. W. 239, 240, 88 Ark. 240, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 560.

Where defendant proposed a scheme by which he was to obtain possession of certain indictments, for the purpose of destroying them, and under such scheme the indictments were actually removed from the files of the court and delivered to him, he was a "principal" throughout the transaction; and if he took them from the person actually removing them, either with or without his consent, he was guilty of a theft of public records. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 791, 178 N. Y. 274, 87 L. R. A. 131 (citing Pen. Code, § 29; People v. Bliven, 19 N. E. 638, 112 N. Y.

79, 8 Am. St. Rep. 701; People v. Peckena, 47 N. E. 883, 153 N. Y. 576).

Where the idea of guilt, on the part of an unmarried participant, of the offense of living in adultery is excluded by the terms of the statute defining the offense (Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended March 21, 1911 [St. 1911, p. 426]), it follows that such participant cannot be held punishable as being an aider and abettor in the offense, even though she be held to be an accomplice under Pen. Code, § 31, defining "principals" as all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, or who aid or abet its commission. Ex parte Cooper, 121 Pac. 318, 320, 162 Cal. 81.

Evidence held insufficient to sustain a conviction for larceny, under Pen. Code, § 29 (now Penal Law [Consol. Laws, c. 40] § 2), making a person who counsels or induces another to commit a crime a "principal." People v. Gerst, 121 N. Y. Supp. 934, 935, 137 App. Div. 272.

Rev. 1905, § 3534, provides that any person who shall unlawfully procure and deliver intoxicating liquor to another shall be the agent of the seller, and makes it a misdemeanor. Held, that one who procured liquor from an illicit dealer in the state by purchase and delivered it to another, both the purchase and the delivery being made at a place where the sale of liquor is prohibited, is deemed a principal, and liable criminally as the seller of the liquor is liable, since in misdemeanors all who participate in the offense are "principals." State v. Burchfield, 63 S. E. 89, 90, 149 N. C. 537.

One who conspired with another to commit a robbery, and gave a signal to announce that the proposed victim had left a certain point, and arrived near the scene when his co-conspirator killed the victim, and then helped him to carry the murdered man into his cabin, was a "principal" and not an accessory, and his guilt was not dependent upon the guilt or innocence, the conviction or acquittal, of his coconspirator or any other participant in the crime. Dean v. State, 37 South. 501, 502, 85 Miss. 40.

Under Pen. Code 1895, arts. 75-78, defining principals in felonies, all persons who are present and participate by acts, or encourage by words or gestures in the commission of the offense, are "principals," though the act directly accomplishing the offense is the act of another. Where cattle stolen in F. county were placed in a pasture of accused in that county, with knowledge that they were stolen, and he employed an innocent third person to drive them to T. county, and there conceal them by shipping them, accused was a principal in the concealment in T. county, within Pen. Code 1895, art. 77, providing that one who employs another who cannot be punished to commit an offense shall be a principal, and T. county could prosecute him. Davis v. State, 136 S. W. 45, 46, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 611.

The mere presence of accused at the time of a homicide committed by a third person is not sufficient to make him a "principal"; but he must say or do something to encourage the third person to do the killing, or the killing must have occurred because of a previous agreement, and, if the third person acted in self-defense, accused could act with him, without becoming guilty as a principal. Patton v. State, 136 S. W. 459, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 71.

An indictment, under Rev. St. 1909, § 4772, declaring that whoever, as principal, or as agent of a corporation or person, shall set up and carry on a bucket shop, or any employe of a person or corporation engaged in carrying on a bucket shop, who under his employment shall assist in carrying on the bucket shop, shall be guilty of a felony, which charges that defendant "as principal" set up and carried on a bucket shop is not sustained by evidence that the bucket shop was being carried on by a corporation, and that defendant was its president. State v. Miner, 185 S. W. 483, 486, 233 Mo. 312.

Under Rev. St. § 1620, one who knowingly rents premises to be occupied for the purpose of prostitution, and which with his knowledge are conducted as a bawdyhouse, aids, abets, and assists in keeping such a house, and may be punished as a "principal" for a violation of section 1776. Griffin v. People, 99 Pac. 321, 322, 44 Colo. 533.

An owner of property, or an agent of such owner, who knowingly rents the same to another to be used as a bawdyhouse, the keeping of which is a misdemeanor, aids and abets the commission of the offense, and under Pen. Code Alaska, § 188, which provides that in misdemeanors there are no accessories, is punishable as a "principal." Rosenkranz v. United States, 155 Fed. 38, 43, 83 C. C. A. 634.

In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, it is not essential to charge on the subject of "principals," since in misdemeanor cases the distinction between principals and accomplices does not apply. A charge that all persons are "principals" who are guilty of acting together in the commission of an offense, and that the criterion is did the parties act together, was the act done in pursuance of a common intent and previously formed design in which the minds of all united; if so, they are alike guilty, providing the offense was actually committed during the existence and in the execution of the common design and intent, whether all were actually bodily present when the offense was actually committed or not—sufficiently submitted the law on the subject of principals. Lott v. State, 127 S. W. 191, 192, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 604.

An instruction, on a prosecution for an illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, that defendant would be guilty if he aided or assisted B. in effecting the sale in violation of law, is not error; B. & C. Comp. § 2153, declaring one who aids and abets in the commission of a crime to be a "principal." State v. Carmody, 91 Pac. 446, 448, 50 Or. 1, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 828.

One present aiding and abetting a burglary is a "principal," under Comp. Laws, § 11,930, abolishing the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and between principals in the first and second degree, and declaring that all persons concerned in the commission of a felony may be tried and punished as principals. People v. Wycoff, 114 N. W. 242, 243, 150 Mich. 449.

Accused was present at a homicide, and the testimony of the state tended to show that he was directly aiding and encouraging the one who did the killing. The court instructed that all persons are "principals" who are guilty of acting together in the commission of an offense, and that where an offense is actually committed by one or more persons, and others are present and, knowing the unlawful intent, aid by acts or encourage by words or gestures those engaged in the commission of the unlawful act, the persons so acting or encouraging are principals. Held, that the instruction did not assume that others were present and knew the unlawful intent of those engaged in the difficulty in question, nor any other fact, but correctly defined "principal," that the jury might intelligently determine and fairly declare, in the light of subsequent portions of the charge, whether accused was or was not a principal. Barton v. State, 111 S. W. 1042, 1044, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 443.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 78, making one who advises or agrees to the commission of an offense, and who is present when it is committed, a "principal," mere presence when an offense is committed, does not make one a principal unless he advises or agrees thereto, so that if accused took a girl to a certain place where she was afterwards assaulted by others who met them there, according to agreement without any purpose of having her assaulted, but, as accused understood, for the purpose of seeing her about a letter, he would not be guilty as a principal, and it was error to refuse an instruction to that effect. Nowlin v. State, 132 S. W. 860, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 356.

In a murder case, a charge that all persons are principals who act together in committing an offense; and that, when an offense is actually committed by one or more persons, but others are present, and, knowing the unlawful intent, aid by acts or encourage by words or gestures those actually engaged in committing the unlawful act, such persons so aiding are "principals," as are all who endeavor at the time of the offense to secure the safety or concealment of the offenders, and one who is present when the offense is committed is a principal whether he aids or not in the illegal act; and that, if decedent was killed on the date charged, and accused was present, and, knowing the unlawful intent, aided by acts or encouraged by words or gestures those actually engaged in killing decedent, or advised or agreed to the killing, and was present when it was done, whether she aided or not in the killing, or endeavored to secure the safety or concealment of the ones doing the act, she would be a principal, and subject to the same punishment as those actually engaged in the killing — was a sufficient charge on the law of principals as declared by Pen. Code 1895, arts. 74-76. Goode v. State (Tex.) 123 S. W. 597, 603, 604.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, there was no question as to defendant's presence at the time of the killing, a charge on "principals" that all persons who are acting together in the commission of an offense are principal offenders, etc., and that deceased was killed by some other person, but the jury had a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant was a party as a principal to such murder, or that another party killed deceased without any aid rendered by defendant, or, if they had a reasonable doubt on the subject, to acquit defendant, was sufficient, without further stating that to be a principal one must be present at the commission of an offense, and do something to aid the party committing the offense, knowing that an offense was being committed. Cecil v. State (Tex.) 100 S. W. 390, 392.

Same—Actual presence

In order to constitute one a "principal" in a crime, he must be actually and bodily present when the offense is committed. McDonald v. State, 79 S. W. 542, 543, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 4.

All persons concerned in the commission of an offense are "principals," whether present when the offense is actually committed or not. Cox v. State, 104 Pac. 1074, 1078, 3 Okl. Cr. 129.

In order that a "principal" shall be answerable for a felony he must have been actually or constructively present where another equally guilty committed the offense. Richardson v. United States, 181 Fed. 1, 5, 104 C. C. A. 69.

Bodily presence on the ground when a robbery by assault is committed is essential to make a participant a "principal." Bollen v. State, 86 S. W. 1025, 1026, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 70.

To render one a "principal" to a murder, his presence need not be strictly actual, immediate presence, such as would make him an eye or ear witness of what passes, but may be a constructive presence; and, where it appears that a person at the time of the homicide was within a few feet of the house in which the homicide was committed, his juxtaposition clearly brought him in legal contemplation as a principal to the homicide, if the facts showed him acting with actual participants. Smith v. State, 105 S. W. 182, 183, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 27.

"Since there must always be a 'principal,' one is such who does the criminal act through an innocent agent, while personally absent. For example, when a dose of poison, or an animate object like a human being, with or without general accountability, but not criminal in the particular instance, inflicts death or other injury in the absence of him whose will set the force in motion, there being no one but the latter whom the law can punish, it of necessity fixes upon him as the doer." Since Burns' Rev. St. 1901, provides a penalty for a woman soliciting and taking medicine for the purpose of procuring a miscarriage, and section 1996 prescribes a penalty for this person administering or prescribing such medicine or any other substance, thereby procuring a miscarriage, or causing the death of the woman, in a prosecution under the latter section, the person administering or prescribing the medicine, and not the woman, is the "principal," and may be punished as such, although absent at the time the medicine was taken or instrument used. Selfert v. State, 67 N. E. 100, 160 Ind. 464, 98 Am. St. Rep. 340 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bish. New Cr. Law, § 651).

"A man is a 'principal,' whatever agencies he employs, if the crime is committed by his will alone. His presence is immaterial. This doctrine extends to the case of the innocent agent, who, acting under mistake of fact, becomes the instrument in the hands of the principal for the commission of the unlawful act." One who knowingly presented, through an innocent agent, a false claim against a city for allowance would be as guilty of the offense of presenting such claim as if he presented it in person. Brunaugh v. State, 90 N. E. 1019, 1029, 173 Ind. 483 (quoting Gillette, Cr. Law [2d Ed.] § 13).

An instruction that, to constitute a person a "principal" in the commission of larceny, the person must have been actually present at its commission is erroneous; the language being entirely too broad and forbidding the idea that constructive presence recognized by all of the authorities. Baldwin v. State, 35 South. 220, 222, 46 Fla. 115.

To constitute a "principal," the offender must either be present where the crime is committed, or he must do some act during the time when the offense is being committed which connects him with the commission in some way, and where the acts committed occurred prior to the commission of the principal offense, or subsequent thereto, and are independent of and disconnected with the actual commission, and no act is done during the commission in aid thereof, one is not a principal offender, but an accomplice, or an accessory, according to the facts. Davis v. State, 117 S. W. 159, 160, 162, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 495.

One who advises others to commit larceny, but who is at several miles distance at the time of the commission of the offense, and who takes no part therein, but assists in the disposal of proceeds, after the theft has been fully committed, is not a "principal," but an "accessory." Skidmore v. State, 115 N. W. 288, 80 Neb. 698.

One using an innocent party to consummate a crime would be a "principal," whether present or absent, under Pen. Code 1895, art. 77, making one a principal who employs another who cannot be punished to commit an offense. Farris v. State, 117 S. W. 798, 799, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 481, 131 Am. St. Rep. 824.

To constitute one a "principal" in a theft, he must have been present and assisted in taking the goods, or he must have aided in the commission of the theft, as by keeping watch or by securing the safety of the principal. That he entered into a conspiracy to commit theft with others is not sufficient. If he advised them in advance to steal the goods, and encouraged them, and furnished means, he is but an "accomplice." O'Quinn v. State, 115 S. W. 39, 44, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 18.

Where defendant was not present when an offense was committed, he could not be charged as a "principal," unless he was doing some act at the time in furtherance thereof. Eddens v. State, 84 S. W. 828, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 539.

One not present when a theft was committed is not a "principal" in the crime. Holmes v. State, 91 S. W. 588, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 348.

One who, though not actually present at the commission of an offense, is engaged in or is doing something in the chain of causation which leads up to the offense and is a necessary part of its accomplishment, is a "principal." Bass v. State, 127 S. W. 1020, 1025, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 186.

If accused's son and grandson took possession of another's cow from the range, and drove her away, with the intention of appropriating her to their own use, and accused was not present, he would not be guilty of the theft as a "principal," though he may have agreed that the animal should be stolen and subsequently butchered, and that he would participate in the butchering and would conceal the meat. Jones v. State, 122 S. W. 31, 33, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 144.

All persons concerned in the commission of felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, are "principals," and no other facts need be alleged in any indictment against such an accessory than are required in an indictment against a principal. Rev. St. § 7697. State v. Bland, 76 Pac. 780, 783, 9 Idaho, 796.

Same—Degrees

Persons present assisting in doing a criminal act are principals in the second degree, not accessories. State v. Rowland Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 58, 59, 153 N. C. 610.

"To constitute one a principal in the second degree, he must not only be present when the crime is committed, but must aid and abet the actual perpetrator of the crime. One who is present when the crime is committed, but neither assists in its commission nor shares in the criminal intent of its perpetrator," is not a principal in the second degree. Thornton v. State, 46 S. E. 640, 641, 119 Ga. 437.

Where the actor, the person who performs the manual act incident to the crime, had felonious intent in the performance thereof, or knew the act was criminal, he is a principal in the first degree, and the person at whose instigation he acted is either a co-principal in the first degree or a principal in the second degree, if actually or constructively present, but, if not so present he is an accessory before the fact. State v. Bailey, 60 S. E. 785, 788, 63 W. Va. 668.

A "principal in the second degree" is one who is present aiding and abetting the principal actor in the commission of the crime, and actual physical presence is not necessary. A constructive presence is sufficient, as in the instance of a person keeping watch or guard at a convenient distance while the murder is being committed by the principal actor. State v. Cremeans, 57 S. E. 405, 406, 62 W. Va. 134.

"A 'principal in the second degree' is he who is present 'aiding and abetting' the act to be done. Actual presence is not necessary. It is sufficient to be so situated as to come readily to the assistance of his fellows." People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 90 N. Y. Supp. 138, 144, 113 App. Div. 329 (citing People v. Peckins, 47 N. E. 883, 153 N. Y. 585).

To constitute one a "principal in the second degree," it is essential that he be present, actually or constructively, at the commission of the crime, and participate in it, sharing the criminal intent of the principal in the first degree. Landrum v. Commonwealth, 96 S. W. 587, 589, 123 Ky. 472.

In wills

Where a will provided "that none of the principal shall be used unless it shall be absolutely necessary" until the devisee becomes 21 years of age, when it shall be paid or turned over to her, by the word "principal" was meant the total proceeds of both the real and personal property. Betty v. Petrie, 128 S. W. 320, 323, 138 Ky. 428.

The words "put on interest," "the interest of my property shall be paid annually," and "the principal shall go," etc., as used in a will, all relate, in their ordinary sense, to dealing with money, the value of the use of money, measured by interest and securities, dischargeable by the payment of money, and not the rents and profits of real estate. Benner v. Mauer, 113 N. W. 663, 664, 133 Wis. 325.

Of trust

The "principal of the trust" consists of the securities in which the trust is vested. Robertson v. De Brulatour, 98 N. Y. Supp. 15, 27, 111 App. Div. 882.

Proximate synonymous

A requested charge in an action for injury to a passenger respecting the "proximate or principal cause" was bad for using the word "principal," which is not a synonym of "proximate." Woolsey v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 16, 18, 128 App. Div. 631.

Stock dividend

Stock issued by a corporation as a stock dividend is "principal," and not income, within a testamentary trust giving the income of a trust fund invested in stocks to life beneficiaries. Bishop v. Bishop, 71 Atl. 583, 591, 81 Conn. 509.

As between the life tenant, entitled to the net income, and the remainderman, entitled to the "principal," of a trust estate invested in corporate stock, a stock dividend is a part of the principal of the trust estate, and goes to the remainderman. Billings v. Warren, 74 N. E. 1050, 1055, 216 Ill. 281.

A dividend in stocks of a corporation declared by its directors out of its surplus net earnings is income, and not "principal," within a deed conveying property, including the stocks on which the dividend is declared, to trustees to pay the income to certain persons for life, the principal on their death to become the property of others. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore v. White, 61 Atl. 295, 296, 102 Md. 73; Same v. Long, 61 Atl. 297, 102 Md. 73.

Subscription rights in additional stock

Defendants, as administrators with the will annexed, came into possession of a fund of which one of them was a beneficiary. A new trustee was appointed on the application of the remaindermen, and the administrators ordered to account for such fund and "all accretions thereto." Held, that subscription rights in additional stock issued by the corporation represented "principal," and not income. Jewett v. Schmidt, 92 N. Y. Supp. 737, 738, 45 Misc. Rep. 471.

PRINCIPAL ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE

Pen. Code, § 172a, provides that every person who, on or within $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles of a university grounds or campus, on which are located the "principal administrative offices" of any university having an enrollment of more than 1,000 students, more than 500 of whom reside or lodge on such university grounds or campus, sells, gives away, or exposes for sale any vinous or alcoholic liquors is guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "principal administrative offices" as so used did not mean those offices and those activities through which the university, as an institution, was organized and financed, but were used in the sense of the principal place of business of the university as such. Ex parte Burke, 116 Pac. 755, 756, 160 Cal. 300.

PRINCIPAL BENEFICIARY

Gen. St. 1909, § 9787, requiring certain affirmative proof to establish the validity of a will written or prepared by one occupying a confidential relation to testator, and who is the sole or principal beneficiary in the will, applies solely to a will written or prepared by one in a confidential relation to testator who receives the whole or the most considerable portion of the estate devised, and not to one written by a person who is one of the principal beneficiaries; the word "principal" meaning main, chief, leading, highest in value, character or importance, most considerable or important. Kelty v. Burgess, 115 Pac. 583, 584, 84 Kan. 678.

PRINCIPAL BUILDINGS

Tax Law, § 10, Laws 1896, p. 801, c. 908, provides if land is divided by a line between two tax districts it shall be assessed in the district where the "dwelling house or other principal buildings" are located. Plaintiff owned a 1,335-acre tract of land, 575 acres in the town of H. and the remainder in the town of S., title to the S. land having been acquired by her father from one person, and to the H. land from several different persons. When assessed there were seven dwelling houses on the H. land and five on the S. land. Neither plaintiff nor her father ever resided on the tract. Held, that the fact that plaintiff's son is her principal agent upon the tract did not make the dwelling house in S. occupied by him the dwelling house comprehended by the statute, and that there is a storehouse on the land in S. in which crops from all parts of the tract are stored, and barns and other buildings, did not make them "principal buildings," there being a greater number of buildings in H., and hence the land does not fall within section 10 of the tax law, and each part of the tract should be assessed in the tax district where it is located. Chamberlain v. Sherman, 103 N. Y. Supp. 239, 242, 53 Misc. Rep. 474.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE

At the common law challenges to jurors for affection or partiality were of two kinds: (1) For principal cause; (2) to the favor. A challenge is called "principal," because if it be founded on truth, it standeth sufficient of itself, without leaving anything to the conscience and discretion of the triors. Co. Litt. 156b. Relationship to one of the parties or interest in the subject-matter of the litigation furnish illustrations of grounds for challenges for "principal cause." People v. Mel, 100 N. W. 913, 914, 137 Mich. 692, 68 L. R. A. 871, 4 Ann. Cas. 960 (quoting State v. Sawtelle, 32 Atl. 831, 66 N. H. 488).

PRINCIPAL DEPARTMENT

See Head of Principal Department.

The sealer of weights and measures department of a city, charged with the ministerial duty of determining the accuracy of scales and measures, is not a "principal department," within Rev. Laws, c. 19, § 9, exempting from the operation of the civil service law heads of principal departments of a city. Attorney General v. Andrew, 91 N. E. 892, 206 Mass. 46.

PRINCIPAL DOORWAY

Mining Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 95 § 19, cl. "f," requires the keeping of an attendant at all principal doorways through which cars are hauled in a mine, to open and close the doors when cars are passing to and from the workings. Held, that the term "principal doorway" is not limited to ways controlling the main current of air before it is subdivided, but extends to each doorway which is essential to the ventilation of any portion of the face of the coal where the miners are at work, and which is in frequent regular and habitual use for hauling cars while coal is being mined. Karkowski v. La Salle County Carbon Coal Co., 93 N. E. 780, 782, 248 Ill. 195.

PRINCIPAL MAKER

As used in a statute providing that whenever the "principal maker" of a note shall die, and the creditor does not within a certain time present the note for allowance, the surety shall be released to the extent that collection might have been made, the term "principal maker" would seem to be the person who would have been the party to the note had there been no sureties or indorsers. In other words, he would be presumed to be the person who received the consideration for making the note, and, where it is made for money loaned, it would ordinarily be the person who borrowed the money. There could not be a parol agreement between various indorsers on a note whereby the first should be "a principal maker" as to the others, and the second a "principal maker" as to those following, etc., which, by communication to the payee, would require him under the statute to follow the estates of each in the order named in case of death, or lose the debt or release the sureties. Tinker v. Catlin, 68 N. E. 773, 780, 205 Ill. 108.

PRINCIPAL MARKET

In Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, the provision that dutiable value shall be the market value "in usual wholesale quantities, at the time of exportation to the United States, in the principal markets of the country from whence imported," refers to the "principal market" where imported merchandise is bought and imported to the United States in wholesale quantities, rather than to markets where there may have been limited purchases. United States v. Haviland & Co., 167 Fed. 414, 418.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE

Principal place of business synonymous, see Principal Place of Business.

Kirby's Dig. § 6067, provides that an action against a corporation created by the laws of the state may be brought in the county in which it is situated or has its "principal office" or place of business, or in which its chief officer resides. Held that, since a corporation may be situated in one county, and have its "principal office" or place of business in another, while its chief officer may reside in a third, an action may be brought against the corporation in either of such counties. Spratley v. Louisiana & A. Ry. Co., 95 S. W. 776, 777, 77 Ark. 412.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 8092, requiring service of process on town mutual fire insurance companies to be made on some corporate officer at defendant's "principal office," service at defendant's "usual business office" is insufficient. Lohofener v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 118 S. W. 515, 136 Mo. App. 540.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 8092, providing for service of process on town mutual insurance companies by service on the president, secretary, or other chief officer in charge of the company's "principal" office, a return showing service on the secretary of the company in its "usual" business office and in charge thereof is insufficient to confer jurisdiction because the "usual" business office of the company may be a place other than its "principal" office. Wicecarver v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 117 S. W. 698, 700, 137 Mo. App. 247.

PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS

The "principal place of business" of a corporation, for the purpose of the venue of an action against it, is its residence. Krogh

v. Pacific Gateway & Development Co., 104 Pac. 698, 11 Cal. App. 237.

The "principal office or place of business" of a corporation, especially in connection with the taxation of its property at such place, means its domicile, which is the place where its governing power resides and is executed, and, under the Tennessee statutes, where its charter is registered, and not where its ordinary business is conducted. Southern Express Co. v. Patterson, 123 S. W. 353, 359, 122 Tenn. 279.

The term "principal office," in a general act, under which a corporation was organized, granted the power to "change the location of its principal office," was intended to include "principal place of business," and hence such a change of the place of business to another city in the state was authorized. Bernstein v. Kaplan, 43 South. 581, 582, 150 Ala. 222.

The phrase "principal place of business," as used in Revisal 1905, § 422, providing that the principal place of business of a domestic corporation shall be its residence for purposes of suing and being sued, is synonymous with the words "principal office," as used in Revisal 1905, §§ 1137, 1176, 1179, respectively providing that, in the formation of a corporation, the location of the principal office in the state must be set forth in the certificate of incorporation, that the board of directors may change the principal office, and that the meeting of stockholders shall be at the principal office in the state. Roberson v. Greenleaf Johnson Lumber Co., 68 S. E. 1064, 1065, 153 N. C. 120.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 101, as amended by Laws 1909, c. 283, providing that the action shall be tried in the judicial subdivision in which defendant resides at the commencement of the action, the venue of an action against a domestic corporation is not any place where it happens to transact business, but in the county of its "principal place of business," the place where its president, secretary, and board of directors meet to transact the governing business of the corporation proper, where its books are kept; that is, where its governing power is exercised and controlled by its board of directors and officers. Mullen v. Northern Accident Ins. Co., 128 N. W. 483, 484, 26 S. D. 402 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5559).

The "principal place of business" of the city of New York being in New York county, it was not a resident of Kings county, and the county court of Kings county had therefore no jurisdiction of an action against such city. Malsch v. City of New York, 86 N. E. 458, 460, 193 N. Y. 460.

A petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed in the district of Massachusetts against a Maine corporation, which had carried on the mercantile business for which it was incorporated in Boston. About six months prior to the filing of the petition, it sold the most of its stock in trade and gave up its place of business, and two months later receivers were appointed by a court of Maine, who took charge of and kept its remaining property in Boston. Held, that the corporation was not "doing business" in any proper sense after the appointment of the receivers, and had not had its "principal place of business" in Massachusetts for the greater part of the six months preceding the filing of the petition, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2 (1), 30 Stat. 545, and that the court in that district was without jurisdiction of the proceedings. In determining whether a corporation has had its "principal place of business" in another state, so as to give the court in that district jurisdiction to adjudicate it a bankrupt, it is immaterial whether or not it complied with the laws of that state to entitle it to do business therein as a foreign corporation. In re Perry Aldrich Co., 165 Fed. 249, 251.

Where a corporation operating factories, mills, or mines in various states has a principal office, from which supreme direction and control are exercised over all its business and property, and its selling and collecting are done, where its directors meet, its books of account are kept, and its correspondence conducted, such office is its "principal place of business," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, cl. 1, 30 Stat. 545, and it is subject to bankruptcy proceedings in that district. Burdick v. Dillon, 144 Fed. 737, 738, 75 C. O. A. 603.

A notice of mechanic's lien describing the lienor as the Wright-Easton-Townsend Company, a corporation of the state of New York, with its principal office in the city of New York, at a given street number, was a compliance with Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 518, c. 418, § 9, subd. 1, requiring the notice to state the business address and principal place of business of a lienor corporation; the terms "principal office" and "principal place of business" being synonymous terms when used in respect to New York corporations, and the assumption being that the principal office of such a corporation is both its "principal place of business" and "business address." Hurley v. Tucker, 112 N. Y. S. 980, 985, 128 App. Div. 580.

Where a manufacturing corporation, although maintaining a nominal office in the state in which it is organized, has its manufacturing and an office from which it conducts its business within a district in another state, its "principal place of business" is in the latter district, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2 (1), 30 Stat. 545, and it is subject to adjudication as a bankrupt therein, although it has ceased manufacturing and is engaged in liquidating its affairs from such principal office. Tiffany v. La Plume

Condensed Milk Co., 141 Fed. 444, 445 (citing In re Marine Machine & Conveyor Co., 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 421, 91 Fed. 630; In re Brice, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 197, 93 Fed. 942; In re Elmira Steel Co., 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 484, 109 Fed. 456; Dressel v. North State Lumber Co., 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 744, 107 Fed. 255; In re Mackey, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 577, 110 Fed. 355; In re Magid-Hope Silk Mfg. Co., 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 610, 110 Fed. 352).

Ky. St. 1903, § 576, requiring each corporation, except those of certain classes, to have its name placed on its "principal" place or places of business, with the word "Incorporated" thereunder, does not apply to a local exchange office of a telephone company at which an assistant manager is kept, where the general business of the company is transacted at offices at other places, to which the local offices report. Commonwealth v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. (Ky.) 108 S. W. 262, 263.

Under Civ. Code, § 305, authorizing the board of directors of a corporation to exercise corporate powers and control the business and property of the corporation, the board of directors may remove the office of the corporation from one location to another in the same city, notwithstanding section 321a, declaring that the principal place of business of a corporation can be changed only with the consent of the holders of two-thirds of the stock, though the word "office" is deemed equivalent to the words "principal place of business." Seal of Gold Mining Co. v. Slater, 120 Pac. 15, 18, 161 Cal. 621.

Under Revisal 1905, § 422, providing that for purposes of suing and being sued the "principal place of business" of a domestic corporation shall be its residence, and section 424, providing that, in the absence of contrary statutes, an action shall be tried in the county where plaintiff or defendant resides at the commencement thereof, an action against a domestic corporation for a personal injury is properly brought in the county of plaintiff's residence, or in the county of the principal place of business of the corporation, at his election. Rackley v. Rowland Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 56, 57, 153 N. O. 171.

PRINCIPAL PLACE OF RESIDENCE

"Principal place of residence" means place of residence. A person cannot, legally speaking, have two places of residence; and the word "principal" may be properly treated as surplusage, in a petition alleging that the petitioner has his principal place of residence within a certain district. Ross-Lewin v. Goold, 71 N. E. 1028, 1029, 211 Ill. 384.

PRINCIPALLY ENGAGED

Engaged principally in manufacturing, see Manufacturer.

Engaged principally in mercantile pursuits, see Mercantile.

The words "principally engaged," in a statute exempting from execution certain articles necessary to carry on the occupation in which one is principally engaged, are not to be construed with reference to the productiveness or profit of one kind of business over another, where two or more occupations are followed at the same time, but with reference to the occupation or business on which the party chiefly relies for a livelihood, and that engrosses the most of his time and attention, not for a day, or a week, or month, but through the year. Smalley v. Masten, 8 Mich. 529, 530, 77 Am. Dec. 467.

PRINCIPLE

In patent law, "the 'principle' of a machine is properly defined to be its mode of operation or that peculiar combination of devices which distinguishes it from other machines. A machine is not a principle or an idea." United States Consol. Seeded Raisin Co. v. Selma Fruit Co., 195 Fed. 264, 270, 115 C. C. A. 234.

A "principle," in the abstract, is a fundamental truth, an original cause, a motive; these cannot be patented, as no one can claim in either of them an exclusive right. Denning Wire & Fence Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co., 189 Fed. 793, 796, 85 C. C. A. 259 (quoting and adopting definition in Le Roy v. Tatnam, 14 How. [55 U. S.] 156, 14 L. Ed. 367).

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED

Under a statute requiring notice of tax sale to be published once in each week for four successive weeks prior to the sale, where the tax sale in 1903 took place on May 19th, and that in 1904 on May 17th, and the affidavit of publication in each case declared that the notice was "printed and published" in a designated newspaper once in each week for four successive weeks, commencing on April 15th, and terminating on May 6th, it showed a sufficient publication; the term "published" being used in the sense of the physical act of printing the notice in a published newspaper, and not to refer to the term of notice, the office of the word "printed" in that connection being only to emphasize such meaning. Bauchier v. Hammer, 123 N. W. 132, 134, 140 Wis. 648.

PRINTED MATTER

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189, for "printed matter," includes post cards of paper combined with such materials as celluloid, silk, and wood; the latter the components of chief value; one side bearing floral and decorative effects produced by spraying and embossing, and the other being printed with the words "Post Card" in various languages. United States v. Deutsch, 178 Fed. 272, 101 C. C. A. 116.

Imported post cards bore on the face words printed in different languages and on the back printed pictorial representations, and were ornamented with feathers; the feathers being the element of chief value. Held, that the printing, and not the feathers, constituted the chief feature of the cards, and that therefore the cards were "printed matter," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189. A. H. Ringk & Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 1021.

So-called lace paper, which is used in decoratively packing confectionery, etc., is not brought within the provision for printed matter in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189, by reason of having names and addresses of merchants printed thereon. Said provision does not cover matter on which the printing is but a subordinate feature. United States v. Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher, 152 Fed. 578, 579.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 433, 30 Stat. 151, the term "printed matter" does not include beer mats, consisting of round pieces of wood pulp upon which have been printed German verses, and the name and advertisement of beer dealers. Frederick Hollender & Co. v. United States, 177 Fed. 594, 595.

Paper used for box tops and similar purposes was printed with trade-marks and business names and addresses, and in some instances with floral or other decorative designs. Held, that the authorities would justify its classification as "printed matter," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189. Hamilton v. United States, 167 Fed. 796, 798, 93 C. C. A. 186.

The provision for "printed matter" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189, does not include Japanese napkins made of crinkled paper and ornamented with designs in colors, stenciled, stamped, or printed thereon. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 172 Fed. 248.

Post cards, with the inscription "Post card" printed thereon in several languages, are "printed matter," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 403, 30 Stat. 189, because such printing has a useful and valuable connection with the article itself. Deutsch v. United States, 172 Fed. 290, 291.

Paper bags elaborately printed with advertising matter relating to the goods intended to be packed and sold within them are not "printed matter" within the meaning of paragraph 403, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, 30 Stat. 189, but are dutiable as manufactures of paper not specially provided for, under paragraph 407 of said act, 30 Stat. 189. Kraut v. United States, 134 Fed. 701, 142 Fed. 1037, affirming 130 Fed. 392, 71 C. C. A. 684.

PRINTER

Foreman

The foreman of the mechanical department of a newspaper or a typesetter is not a "printer" or "publisher," who is authorized by Mills' Ann. St. § 3884, to make proof of publication of a notice of tax sale; the quoted terms relating to one who has some title or proprietary interest in the plant. Herr v. Graden, 127 Pac. 319, 321, 22 Colo. App. 511.

PRINTING CLOTHS

Where a small calico printer, in embarrassed circumstances, had contracted to work out a debt by printing, under a contract which bound his creditors to furnish him with nothing to enable him to fulfill his contract but the gray cloth to be printed, and the father of the calico printer guaranteed his son's "return and delivery of any and all 'printing cloths' the said creditors may hereafter deliver to him to be printed," under a certain contract identified by date and subject, the subject of the guaranty was the return and delivery of the gray cloth only; and damages could not be recovered upon the guaranty, because goods returned printed were not printed in a workmanlike manner, and were to be confined, as to goods not returned, to the cost of the gray goods, with interest thereon after a reasonable time for their return printed. Bailey v. Larchar, 5 R. I. 530, 535.

PRINTING PAPER

An imitation parchment paper known as grease-proof paper, which, though it can be printed on, is not suitable for printing purposes, but is used almost altogether as wrapping paper, is not dutiable as "printing paper," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 396, 30 Stat. 187, but as paper not specially provided for, under paragraph 402 (30 Stat. 189). Germania Importing Co. v. United States, 142 Fed. 215.

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, pars. 396, 401, 30 Stat. 187, 189, handmade printing paper is dutiable as "handmade" rather than as "printing paper," even when suitable for printing. In construing the application of the terms "handmade" and "printing" as applied to paper imports, consideration was given to the evident intent of Congress (1) as revealed in numerous successive tariff acts to reduce the duties on printing paper for the benefit of the ordinary reading public, and (2) by elevating handmade paper into a new class, now that it has become in the art of printing a luxury. United States v. Davies, Turner & Co., 177 Fed. 371, 372, 101 C. C. A. 425.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 396, 30 Stat. 187, the provision for "printing paper" suitable for books and newspapers" prescribes an exceptionally low duty on such material on account of the educational value of books and newspapers, and only such paper as comes within the true spirit of the law should be assessed thereunder. A thin, flimsy, colored paper, said to be used for "printing circulars and printing of all kinds," but not shown to be used for books or newspapers, is not within the scope of the provision. Gallenkamp v. Wyman, 178 Fed. 460, 461.

Handmade printing paper, suitable for books and newspapers, is more specifically provided for under Tariff Act as "printing paper * * * suitable for books and newspapers," than as "handmade * * * paper," under said act. Miller, Sloane & Wright v. United States, 128 Fed. 469; United States v. Miller, Sloan & Wright, 135 Fed. 349, 68 C. C. A. 131.

PRIOR

PRIOR APPROPRIATION

When, from among the most energetic and enterprising classes of the East, that enormous tide of emigration poured into the West, there was found an arid land, which could be utilized as an agricultural country, or made valuable for its gold, only by the use of its streams of water. The new inhabitants were without law, but they quickly recognized that each man should not be a law unto himself. Accustomed, as they had been, to obedience to the laws they had helped make, as the settlements increased to such numbers as justified organization, they established their local customs and rules for their government in the use of water and land. They found a new condition of things. The use of water to which they had been accustomed, and the laws concerning it, had no application here. The demand for water they found greater than the supply, as is the unfortunate fact still all over this arid region. Instead of attempting to divide it among all, thus making it unprofitable to any, or instead of applying the common-law riparian doctrine to which they had been accustomed, they disregarded the traditions of the past, and established as the only rule suitable to their situation that of "prior appropriation." This did not mean that the first appropriator could take what he pleased, but what he actually needed, and could properly use without waste. Thus was established the local custom, which pervaded the entire West, and became the basis of the laws we have to-day on that subject. Willey v. Decker, 73 Pac. 210, 216, 11 Wyo. 496, 100 Am. St. Rep. 939 (quoting and adopting definition in Drake v. Earhart, 23 Pac. 541, 2 Idaho, 710).

PRIOR CLAIMS

In trespass to try title, where it appeared that defendant claimed under a "prior deed" of the land which was the only "prior claim" involved, the "prior claim" was referable to "prior deed," where used in a charge that notice to a subsequent purchaser of a prior deed could have been given by knowledge of facts which would have put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would have led to actual notice of the prior deed, or by knowledge of another person of the prior claim if he were found to be the purchaser's agent; the terms as used being practically synonymous. La Brie v. Cartwright, 118 S. W. 785, 788, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 144.

PRIOR DISCOVERY

To constitute a "prior discovery," which will support a location on public grounds as an oil placer claim under the mining laws, the locator must have actually discovered oil within the limits of his claim. Mere surface indications of the existence of oil therein, however strong, are not sufficient, nor is the existence of oil on adjoining lands. Bay v. Oklahoma Southern Gas, Oil & Min. Co., 73 Pac. 936, 940, 13 Okl. 425; Whiting v. Straup, 95 Pac. 849, 854, 17 Wyo. 1, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1093 (quoting Nevada-Sierra Oil Co. v. Home Oil Co., 98 Fed. 673).

PRIOR IN TIME

Under the general rule that, between mere equities, that which is "prior in time" is regarded as the best and takes precedence over any which may be subsequently created, where a testator died, leaving certain debts, and there was a judgment existing against one of his children at the time of testator's death, the equities of testator's creditors and other children were "prior in time" to the equity created in favor of the judgment creditor of the child in question. Alderson v. Alderson's Guardian, 87 S. W. 810, 811, 120 Ky. 666.

PRIOR ORDINANCE

The local improvement act of June 14, 1897, as amended by the act of 1901, provides, in section 58, that no special assessment shall be held void because levied for work already done under a "prior ordinance," if it shall appear that such work was done in good faith, by the contract duly let and executed, pursuant to an ordinance providing that such improvement should be paid for by special assessment or special tax. This provision shall only apply when the prior ordinance shall be held insufficient for the purpose of such assessment, or otherwise defective, so that the collection of the assessment therein provided for becomes impossible. Held, that the "prior ordinance" contemplated by the section may be one passed under the laws existing prior to 1897. Gorton v. City of Chicago, 66 N. E. 541, 542, 201 Ill. 534.

PRIOR PUBLIC USE

"When the subject of invention is a machine, it may be tested and tried in a building, either with or without closed doors. In either case such use is not a public use, within the meaning of the statute, so long as the inventor is engaged in good faith in testing its operation. He may see cause to alter it and improve it, or not. His experiments will reveal the fact whether any, and what, alterations may be necessary. If durability is one of the qualities to be obtained, a long period, perhaps years, may be necessary to enable the inventor to discover whether his purpose is accomplished, and though, during all that period, he may not find that any changes are necessary, yet he may be justly said to be using his machine only by way of experimenting; and no one would say that such a use, pursued with a bona fide intent of testing the qualities of the machine, would be a public use, within the meaning of the statute. So long as he did not voluntarily allow others to make it and use it, and so long as it is not on sale for general use, he keeps the invention under his own control, and does not lose his title to a patent. It would not be necessary, in such a case, that the machine should be put up and used only in the inventor's own shop or premises. He may have it put up and used in the premises of another, and the use may inure to the benefit of the owner of the establishment. Still, if used under the surveillance of inventor and for the purpose of enabling him to test the machine, and ascertain whether it will answer the purpose intended, and make such alterations and improvement as experience demonstrates to be necessary, it will still be a mere experimental use, and not a public use, within the meaning of the statute." Where a patent is for a manufactured article itself, designed for general use, a presumption arises that, when the inventor issues such article to the public, he regards it as a finished product, and, in case he does not apply for a patent within two years, abandonment of his purpose to do so may well be assumed; but where the invention is for a machine designed to produce articles, a different rule as to experimental use may well apply, and, although the articles produced may be perfect, the machine may not, and the sale of the product does not necessarily render the use of the machine a "prior public use," where none are sold, and the use is entirely under the observation of the inventor. Bryce Bros. Co. v. Seneca Glass Co., 140 Fed. 161, 171 (quoting and adopting definition in Elizabeth v. American Nicholson Pavement Co., 97 U. S. 126, 24 L. Ed. 1000).

In an action against a street railroad for personal injuries, error in instructing that the street railroad had no prior right to that part of the street occupied by its track, as against pedestrians and vehicles, is not cured by an instruction that it had a superior and preferential right, since there is no distinction between a "prior" right and a "superior" or "preferential" right, and hence the two instructions were clearly inconsistent and left the jury to accept either and disregard the other. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Gustafson, 121 Pac. 1015, 1020, 21 Colo. App. 478.

In a clause in a lease giving the lessee, at the expiration of the term, "the prior right to lease the same, said premises, for a further term of five years" at a specified rental, the word "prior" did not qualify the right of renewal, as the lessee's right to renew must necessarily be prior to the right of others. Butt v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 92 Pac. 652, 653, 6 Cal. App. 581.

PRIOR SUIT

In personal actions priority of suit as between a federal and state court is determined by the time when the parties are served with process, and not by the date of the filing of the two actions. Defendant brought an action in ejectment in a state court against a nonresident receiver to recover a tract of land, and service was made by publication; the date of last publication being September 23d. Prior to the filing of such action, a bill had been filed in the federal court by the receiver and others against defendant to quiet title to the same land in complainants, and personal service was made on defendant September 24th. Two of the complainants in such suit claiming title to the land were not parties to the action in ejectment. Held, that the ejectment action was not a prior suit within the rule that a federal court will ordinarily in its discretion stay proceedings in a suit before it to await the termination of a prior suit in a state court involving the same matters. Benoist v. Smith, 191 Fed. 514, 515.

PRIOR TO MATURITY

A mortgage securing notes maturing at different times stipulated that, on default in the payment of any one of the notes, the whole indebtedness should be due at the option of the mortgagee. A contemporaneous agreement provided that any one or more partial payments might be made at any time "prior to maturity," and that all payments so made should be indorsed and credit given. Held, that the words, "prior to maturity," meant the time prior to the election of the mortgagee to declare the entire debt due; a mortgage due by election of the mortgagee being as fully matured as one due by the expiration of the extreme limit of time fixed for payment. Bartlett Estate Co. v. Fairhaven Land Co., 94 Pac. 900, 903, 49 Wash. 55, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 590, 128 Am. St. Rep. 556.

PRIOR TO THE PASSAGE

In an Iowa statute providing that a homestead may be sold on execution for debts contracted "prior to the passage" of the law, the court in Charles v. Lamberson, 1 Iowa, 442, 63 Am. Dec. 457, held that the "words 'prior to the passage' we think amount to the same thing as if the Legislature had used the word 'heretofore,' and either must relate to the time of taking effect, and not to the time of passage." Scales v. Marshall, 70 S. W. 945, 946, 96 Tex. 140.

The phrase "prior to the passage of this act," in Local Option Law of 1908 (Laws Sp. Sess. 1908, p. 4, c. 2), which contained no emergency clause, and provided in section 9 thereof that 90 days after the holding of an election, resulting in prohibition, liquor licenses should be void, but that no license issued prior to the passage of this act should be terminated by virtue of the act or any vote thereunder, was used in its technical sense as referring to the time of the act going into effect on the distribution of the session laws to the various counties and the proclamation of the Governor, and a liquor license issued after the enactment of the statute, but before the Governor's proclamation, was not terminated by a local option election resulting in prohibition. State v. Williams, 90 N. E. 754, 173 Ind. 414, 140 Am. St. Rep. 261, 21 Ann. Cas. 986.

PRIORITIES

"Priorities" in bankruptcy are often called preferences. They are given out of the bankrupt's estate after all liens upon the assets and all claims of others in the things which constitute them have been discharged. Smith v. Mottley, 150 Fed. 266, 268, 80 C. C. A. 154.

PRIORITY IN PAYMENT

A lien is a qualified right which, in a given case, may be exercised over the property of another. It attaches to the subjects of property and follows them in their transmission to others. "Priority in payment" is preference in the appropriation of the proceeds of the debtor's property, and if, before it has attached, there is a bona fide transfer of the property, the right will be lost. Advance Thresher Co. v. Beck, 128 N. W. 315, 316, 21 N. D. 55, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 517 (quoting and citing Anderson v. State, 23 Miss. 459).

PRISM

PRISMATIC GLASS

The Tariff Act, 30 Stat. 158, provision for strips of glass ground or polished to "prismatic form" is not limited to strips so ground that a side in itself forms a prism, but includes also strips that fulfill the functions of a prism, as where there are ground in one side fine parallel longitudinal incisions forming prisms. United States v. Ashcroft Mfg. Co., 172 Fed. 449; Id., 176 Fed. 736, 100 C. C. A. 281.

PRISON

See State Prison.

The word "prison," used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6959, providing for the commitment of persons who have been acquitted of crime on the ground of insanity, comprehends the penitentiary, any county jail, or any state hospital for insane. State ex rel. Thompson v. Snell, 89 Pac. 931, 933, 46 Wash. 327, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191.

A "prison" is not a place of refuge for a criminal. It is for his punishment, to which he is involuntarily committed, and the same power that commits him can take him from it, when in the interest of justice he should be transferred elsewhere to answer for his misdeeds. Commonwealth v. Ramun- no, 68 Atl. 184, 186, 219 Pa. 204, 14 L. R. A.

(N. S.) 209, 123 Am. St. Rep. 653, 12 Ann. Cas. 818.

Where a commitment for contempt in supplementary proceedings recited that, on the debtor's failure to comply with the order for the payment of the debt, he was adjudged guilty of contempt and "committed to prison for the term of 14 days," the term "prison" was sufficiently broad to include all institutions for the detention of persons sentenced to imprisonment, so that the commitment was not in excess of the jurisdiction of the police court, as authorizing imprisonment in the house of correction at hard labor, and therefore would not sustain an action for false imprisonment. Brewer v. Casey, 82 N. E. 45, 196 Mass. 384.

Industrial school

A commitment of a boy to the State Industrial School, in pursuance of Comp. St. 1907, c. 75, § 4940, providing that where a boy under 18 shall be found guilty of any crime, except murder or manslaughter, the court may instead of entering judgment or sentencing the boy to the penitentiary, commit him to the State Industrial School, is not a punishment, nor is the industrial school a prison, so as to require the imposition of a fine rather than the commitment, within the rule that, where one of two or more punishments may be imposed, the court should inflict the one which would be the less severe and result in the least disgrace. Roberts v. State, 118 N. W. 574, 576, 82 Neb. 651.

PRISON BREACH

An escape is where one who is under arrest gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law, and where an escape from confinement is effected by the prisoner with force, it is called a "prison breaking," and where it is effected by others with force, it is known as a "rescue." State v. Sutton, 84 N. E. 824, 826, 170 Ind. 473.

PRISONER

As public charge, see Public Charge.

Discharge of prisoner, see Discharge.

The word "prisoner" used in section 2248 et seq., Gen. St. 1906, relating to habeas corpus proceedings, has reference to any person unlawfully restrained of his liberty or unlawfully detained from his proper custody, and includes minors. Porter v. Porter, 53 South. 546, 547, 60 Fla. 407, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 867.

Persons committed to the county jail for violations of city ordinances, as well as persons committed for violations of general laws, are "prisoners," within the meaning of the law providing for the board of prisoners by the sheriff at the county's expense. Burton v. Erie County, 56 Atl. 40, 41, 206 Pa. 570.

Juvenile delinquent

Act March 2, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 106), providing for the care of delinquent children, is not a criminal statute, but a reformatory one, and a person charged with assisting a juvenile delinquent to escape from custody, under the provisions of the act, is not guilty of a crime, under Rev. Codes, § 6456, providing that every person who willfully assists prisoners to escape is guilty of a felony; the delinquent not being a "prisoner" within the statute. Ex parte Small, 116 Pac. 118, 119, 19 Idaho, 1.

PRISONERS OF WAR

On the representations of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War sent troops into the vicinity of an Indian reservation to serve as a repressing influence on the Indians, a group of whom, under a leader, threatened trouble. The officer in command arrested the leader and some of his immediate followers. While the arrest was made, the troops were fired on by other Indians, and the fire was returned. The Indians arrested were, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, confined for an indefinite period at hard labor, on condition that they could be released whenever it might be deemed wise to do so. Held, that the Indians were not "prisoners of war," and their detention could not be justified on the ground that a state of war existed. Ex parte Bi-a-Lil-Le, 100 Pac. 450, 451, 12 Ariz. 150.

PRIVACY

PRIVATEPRIVATE ACT

"Private acts" are those which operate only on particular persons and private concerns, in contradistinction to those which regard the whole community. State ex rel. Roberts v. Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co., 123 Pac. 166, 167, 32 Okl. 607 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5567).

A "private bill" applies only to individuals or corporations, and not to municipalities. Gubner v. McClellan, 115 N. Y. Supp. 755, 759, 130 App. Div. 716.

In an article in the Atlantic Monthly for January, 1906 (volume 97, p. 69), Mr. Samuel P. Orth states that: "A 'public law' is a measure that affects the welfare of the state as a unit; a 'private law' is one that provides an exception to the public rule; the one is an answer to a public need and the other an answer to a private prayer. When it acts upon a public bill, a Legislature legislates; when it acts upon a private bill, it adjudicates. It passes from one function of a lawmaker to that of a judge. It is transformed from a tribunal of the people into a justice shop for the seeker after special privilege." Anderson v. Board of Com'n of Cloud County, 95 Pac. 583, 586, 77 Kan. 721.

P. L. 1907, p. 114, authorizing the mayors in cities having a population of not less than 100,000 or more than 200,000 inhabitants to appoint boards of public works, is not a private, local, or special law affecting the internal affairs of towns or counties, within the constitutional prohibition. Wilson v. McKelvey, 77 Atl. 94, 95, 78 N. J. Law, 621.

Act April 8, 1909 (P. L. 1909, p. 96), creating a board of excise commissioners in cities having a population of not less than 50,000 nor more than 100,000 inhabitants, is not a "private, local or special law" regulating the internal affairs of towns or counties within the constitutional prohibition. Wilson v. Fromm, 78 Atl. 198, 80 N. J. Law, 582.

Va. Code 1904, §§ 1759, 1766, denouncing certain acts as misdemeanors affecting the interests of the Virginia Pharmaceutical Association, and undertaking to give to the appointees of such association the exclusive right to be prosecutors of such crimes and the exclusive beneficiary in the penalty to the extent of a half of the fines imposed, apply to the whole state, and make a violation of its provisions by any person a misdemeanor punishable by fine, and are not "special or private laws" within Const. 1902, § 63, cl. 1 (Code 1904, p. cccxiii), prohibiting the General Assembly from enacting any local, special, or private law for the punishment of crime. Bertram v. Commonwealth, 62 S. E. 969, 971, 108 Va. 902.

Where all objects which can constitutionally be included in a class are by legislation recognized by inclusion therein, such legislation will be general in the constitutional sense, and P. L. 1907, p. 365, art. 25, supplementary to the school law creating and providing for the Teachers' Retirement Fund, is not a private, local, or special law, violative of Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, prohibiting the passage of such laws in certain cases, because for constitutional reasons it did not compel teachers whose contracts antedated the enactment of the supplement to become members of the fund, but only those whose contracts were made after it became effective. Allen v. Board of Education of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 101, 103, 81 N. J. Law, 135.

The charter of a building and loan association, obtained under the general law, is not a "local" or "private" law, within Code 1906, § 8, providing that private and local laws, not revised and brought into the Code, are not affected by its adoption; and so is not saved from the operation of section 2673, revising the usury law, and doing away with the exception thereof, whereby building and loan associations could receive more than 10 per cent. interest. Mississippi Building & Loan Ass'n v. McElveen, 56 South. 187, 189, 100 Miss. 16.

Highway Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 25) § 59a, added by Laws 1910, c. 701, providing that awards under any statute for damages to real estate by change of grade of any street, etc., shall bear interest, is a general, and not a local, law, as affecting the sufficiency of the title of the act. People ex rel. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Prendergast, 95 N. E. 715, 717, 202 N. Y. 188.

Election Law (Laws 1896, p. 893, c. 909, as amended by Laws 1908, p. 1908, c. 521), relating to cities of a million or more inhabitants, provides that the register shall contain a column for the signature of the elector, or, if unable to write, for entering his identification statement. If the elector cannot write, the inspectors are required to ask him certain questions as to his name, parentage, occupation, etc. Section 3 requires each clerk to keep a pollbook which each elector must sign before he receives a ballot, the signature to be compared with the elector's signature in the inspector's register, or, if the elector cannot read, he must answer the same questions propounded to him when he registered. Held that, being an amendment to the state election law, the fact that it contains provisions applying only to cities of a million or more inhabitants, deemed necessary in the light of local conditions, does not render it a "private or local bill" within the prohibition of Const. art. 3, § 18. Ahern v. Elder, 88 N. E. 1059, 1061, 195 N. Y. 493.

Const. § 110, defines a special or "private law" as one which applies to an individual association or corporation. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Sayre, 39 South. 240, 142 Ala. 641, 4 Ann. Cas. 656.

Ordinance

A county ordinance is within Pen. Code, § 963, providing that, in pleading a "private statute," it is sufficient to refer to the statute by its title and the day of its passage, and that the court must thereupon take judicial notice thereof. Ex parte Childs, 81 Pac. 667, 1 Cal. App. 39.

PRIVATE ALLEY

A "private alley" is ordinarily an alley which has not been dedicated to the public use, and to which the general public is denied access, or which is set apart for some particular purpose. A private passage or way is sometimes referred to as a private alley, especially when bordered by trees or otherwise defined or inclosed. Alleys in cities and towns are usually public, and a private alley therein is exceptional. Under Code, § 916, requiring that land platted shall be divided by streets into blocks with alleys, and section 751 authorizing cities to widen, vacate, improve, and repair alleys, the word "alley," when used by one dealing with lots in platted ground and referring to an alley therein, presumptively means a public alley. Talbert v. Mason, 113 N. W. 918, 921, 136 Iowa, 373, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 259.

PRIVATE BANK

A "private bank," carried on by an individual, is not a quasi corporation under the banking law. In re Purl's Estate, 125 S. W. 849, 853, 147 Mo. App. 105.

PRIVATE BANKER

Institution as including, see Institution.

The term "individual banker" has been construed to mean a person who, having complied with the statutory requirements, has received authority from the banking department to engage in the business of banking, subject to its inspection, supervision, and to the burdens imposed, and the term "private bankers" has been construed to mean persons or firms engaged in banking without having any special privileges or authority from the state. The term "individual banker," as used in the statutes of Montana, declaring guilty of a felony every officer or agent of a bank, and every "individual banker," teller, or clerk of an individual banker, who receives deposits, knowing that such bank or association or banker is insolvent, means one other than a private banker, and the statute does not authorize the conviction of a private banker. Ex parte Wisner, 92 Pac. 958, 959, 36 Mont. 298.

A corporation authorized to deal in notes, loans, and bonds is not comprehended by the section of the federal bankruptcy act, making "private banks" subject to involuntary bankruptcy proceedings. Murphy v. Penniman, 66 Atl. 282, 289, 105 Md. 452, 121 Am. St. Rep. 583.

PRIVATE BILL

See Private Act.

PRIVATE BOARDING HOUSE

In Humburd v. Crawford, 105 N. W. 330, 128 Iowa, 743, it was held that if one served meals only in pursuance of previous arrangements, and therefore to particular individuals rather than to any who might apply, his place was not an eating house, but a "private boarding house" only, and that the civil rights statute did not apply. Brown v. J. H. Bell Co., 123 N. W. 231, 234, 235, 146 Iowa, 89, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 852.

PRIVATE CAPACITY

See, also, Public Capacity.

A borough which undertakes to supply water to its inhabitants acts in a "private" and not a public capacity. Carlisle Gas & Water Co. v. Carlisle Borough, 67 Atl. 844, 845, 218 Pa. 554 (citing Jolly v. Borough of Monaca, 65 Atl. 809, 216 Pa. 345; Bally v. City of Philadelphia, 39 Atl. 494, 184 Pa. 594, 39 L. R. A. 837, 63 Am. St. Rep. 812).

PRIVATE CARRIER

A "common carrier" is one who openly professes to carry for hire the goods of all who choose to employ him, and whose duty it is to carry for all who comply with the terms as to freight, etc.; while a "private carrier" is one who, without being engaged in the business generally, undertakes to carry goods for hire in a particular case. The Cape Charles, 198 Fed. 346, 349.

A common carrier may become a "private carrier," when, as a matter of accommodation or special engagement, it undertakes to carry something which it is not its business to carry. Santa Fé, P. & P. Ry. Co. v. Grant Bros. Const. Co., 108 Pac. 467, 469, 13 Ariz. 186.

A furniture mover is a "private carrier" or bailee for hire, subject only to the duties and responsibilities of such a bailee, unless by agreement he assumes additional ones. Jamnet v. American Storage & Moving Co., 84 S. W. 128, 130, 109 Mo. App. 257.

A "private carrier" is one who does not engage in the business of carrying, or does not hold himself out to carry, certain kinds of property, and therefore, respecting the carriage, enjoys the full freedom of the right of contract, and may stipulate for relief from liability for every kind of accident resulting from negligence or otherwise. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henry, 83 N. E. 710, 712, 170 Ind. 94.

There are two kinds of carriers, a common carrier and a private carrier; a "private carrier" being one who acts in a particular case for hire or reward. O'Rourke v. Bates, 133 N. Y. Supp. 392, 393, 73 Misc. Rep. 414.

"There are but two carriers known in law, 'private carriers' and common carriers. A private carrier undertakes to deliver particular goods at a particular place. He is not bound in law to undertake such transportation. When opportunity for such employment is presented, he may reject it or avail himself of it as he sees fit. He enters into a contract applicable to and binding him only as to the particular undertaking. He does not hold himself out to the public as a carrier." State ex rel. Winnett v. Union Stock Yards Co., 115 N. W. 627, 630, 81 Neb. 67.

Lighter

Under the rule of the American courts of admiralty a lighter hired exclusively to convey the goods of one person to a particular place for an agreed compensation is not a "common carrier" with respect to such goods, but a "private carrier," and liable only as a bailee for hire. The Wildenfels, 161 Fed. 864, 866, 89 C. C. A. 58.

PRIVATE CLAIM

A claim by a private corporation against a state for excess registration fees, paid for registering automobiles and illegally retained by the state, is a "private claim" within the statute giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction of private claims. Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. State, 131 N. Y. Supp. 62, 63, 73 Misc. Rep. 498.

PRIVATE CORPORATION

A "private corporation" is one whose object is to promote private interests. Hart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 6 W. Va. 336, 357 (quoting and adopting Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 30).

If the entire interest does not belong to the government, or if the corporation is not created for political or municipal power. It is a "private corporation." St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Traweck, 19 S. W. 370, 371, 84 Tex. 65; Branch Bank of State at Mobile v. Collins, 7 Ala. 95, 101 (citing Aug. & A. Corp. 23; Trustees of University of Alabama v. Winston [Ala.] 5 Stew. & P. 17).

A "private corporation" is one created for advancement of some private end and derives existence from consent of the public and in a measure partakes of a public nature. Rhodes v. Love, 69 S. E. 436, 437, 153 N. C. 468.

A "private corporation" is an association of persons to whom the sovereign has offered a franchise to become an artificial juridical person, with a name of its own, under which they can act and contract, and sue and be sued. Mackay v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 72 Atl. 583, 586, 82 Conn. 73, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

"Private corporations" are those created for the immediate benefit and advantage of the individuals constituting them, and the franchises conferred are to be exercised for their advantage. The corporation stands to them in the relation of trustee, holding the property owned by it, and dividing the profits arising from its management and the employment of its franchises, for these individuals as cestuis que trust. Trustees of Carick Academy v. Clark, 80 S. W. 64, 67, 112 Tenn. 483.

"'Private corporations' are those which are created for the immediate benefit and advantage of individuals, and their franchises may be considered as privileges conferred on a number of individuals to be exercised and enjoyed by them in the form of a corporation." Whether these privileges are given to the corporators for their own benefit or for the benefit of other individuals, the corporation must be viewed in relation to the franchises as a trustee, and each of those who are beneficially interested in them

s a cestui que trust. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 65 N. H. 473, 628.

"'Private corporations' are associations formed by the voluntary agreement of their members, such as banking, railroad, and manufacturing companies, etc., for the preservation and advancement of private interests." A corporation which was created by the Legislature, and which was to consist of certain public officers to be appointed perpetually by public authority and subject to public control by designated public officers to administer a fund which was left in trust to educate poor children, was not a "private corporation" but was a quasi public corporation. Wambeisle v. Orange Hum. Soc., 5 S. C. 25, 27, 84 Va. 446.

A railroad company is a "private corporation," in the purview of Const. § 87, providing that the operation of any general law shall not be suspended by the Legislature for the benefit of any individual or private corporation. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 36 South. 74, 76, 83 Miss. 46.

A railroad corporation is a "private corporation" in many respects, though in the strict sense of the ordinary business corporation it is not, since it is charged with duties of a public nature which distinguish it from a purely private corporation, but its foundation is private, and it is organized for gain, and in its strictly private rights is as much beyond legislative control as are the rights of a purely private corporation. Mannington v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 33, 158.

An educational corporation in which the state has no interest, and over which it exercises no control, and which has simply received from the state comparatively small benefactions, for specific purposes, is a "private corporation." Medical College of Georgia v. Rushing, 57 S. E. 1083, 1085, 1 Ga. App. 68.

Const. 1901, § 229, providing that the charter of any corporation shall be subject to amendment or repeal under general laws, which, as shown by the official copy of the Constitution on file in the office of the Secretary of State, is under the subhead "Private Corporations," applies only to private business corporations. City of Ensley v. Simpson, 52 South. 61, 65, 166 Ala. 366.

PRIVATE CROSSING

As road, see Road.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE

A person who agreed to act as private detective to watch the movements of a husband and report to the wife, for which he was promised a certain fee, undertook "to engage in the business of a private detective or hire or reward," within Laws 1898, p. 120, c. 422, § 1, as amended by Laws 1901, p.

1002, c. 362, requiring private detectives to be licensed, though he was not regularly engaged in the business. Fox v. Smith, 108 N. Y. Supp. 181, 182, 123 App. Div. 366.

PRIVATE DOMAIN

Unfenced or unoccupied lands belonging to some private person or corporation cannot in any possible construction of the term be called public domain. Such lands are "private domain." An animal might be away from its accustomed range, and still be in a private inclosure, many miles from any public lands. State v. Cunningham, 90 Pac. 755, 756, 35 Mont. 547.

PRIVATE DUTY

A driver of a city cart, engaged in hauling trash and dirt for the city, is not engaged in a "public or governmental duty," which is a duty given by the state to a city as a part of the state's sovereignty, to be exercised by the city for the benefit of the public living within and without the corporate limits, but is engaged in a "private or corporate duty," and for his negligence the city is liable. City of Pass Christian v. Fernandez, 56 South. 329, 100 Miss. 76, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649.

PRIVATE DWELLING

As public place, see Public Place.

A restrictive building covenant, stipulating that the buildings erected on the premises shall be first-class "private houses" prohibits the use of a private dwelling on the premises for a private sanitarium; for a "private house" is a "private dwelling" intended for private living, and a private dwelling is a "dwelling house" in which a person or family lives in an individual or private state. Barnett v. Vaughan Institute, 119 N. Y. Supp. 45, 46, 184 App. Div. 921.

The distinction between "private dwelling house" or a "private residence" on the one side and a house built or occupied as a residence for two or more families is obvious, and a covenant by a grantee not to use the premises for any other purpose except for a private residence is violated by constructing a dwelling house designed to accommodate two families, and allowing two families to occupy the same. Koch v. Corrufo, 75 Atl. 767, 768, 77 N. J. Eq. 172, 140 Am. St. Rep. 552.

PRIVATE EASEMENT

A "private easement" implies, as an essential quality thereof, two distinct tenements, namely, the dominant, to which the right belongs, and the servient, on which the obligation rests. Maryland & P. R. Co. v. Silver, 73 Atl. 297, 300, 110 Md. 510 (citing Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. [N. Y.] 89).

PRIVATE ENTRY

See At Private Entry.

PRIVATE ESTATES

The English translation of Civ. Code La. 1825, art. 450, reading, "Les 'choses' qui sont dans le domaine de chaque individu forment les 'biens' et les richesses particuliers," is "private estates and fortunes are those which belong to individuals." State v. Fontenot, 38 South. 630, 632, 112 La. 628.

PRIVATE EXAMINATION

"Private" and "separate" mean substantially the same thing. Thus a certificate of acknowledgment, stating that a wife, on a "separate" examination, apart from her husband, acknowledged the deed, complies with the law requiring that her acknowledgment shall be on "private examination." Timber v. Desparols, 101 N. W. 879, 881, 18 S. D. 587.

PRIVATE FERRY

A "private ferry" is for the transportation of one's own property in his own boat. Parsons v. Hunt (Tex.) 81 S. W. 120, 122.

PRIVATE GAIN

As used in Const. § 170, exempting from taxation property of educational institutions not used or employed for private gain, but the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education, the words "private gain" have reference only to the gain of the person, corporation, or stockholders owning the property. Hence college property was not rendered liable for taxation, because the trustees leased it to a person who maintained a school therein for a profit, the rentals derived by the trustees being wholly applied to the cause of education. Commonwealth v. Trustees of Hamilton College, 101 S. W. 405, 125 Ky. 329.

PRIVATE HIGHWAY

"It is true that the term 'private highway' embraces a contradiction which destroys the original significance of the noun if the adjective is recognized." Under Pub. Acts, 1909, No. 283, c. 9, §§ 7-10, authorizing the opening of temporary highways which "shall be private highways," to allow the owners of timber land to remove the timber therefrom, made the so-called temporary highways private roads. Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 133 N. W. 822, 825, 167 Mich. 673.

PRIVATE HOSPITAL

A "private hospital" is one founded and maintained by a private person or corporation; the state or municipality having no voice in the management or control of its property or the formation of rules for its government. Such a hospital incorporated and conducted for private gain and for the benefit of the stockholders thereof is liable in damages to its patients for the negligence or misconduct of its employes. Hogan v. Clarksburg Hospital Co., 59 S. E. 943, 944, 63 W. Va. 84.

PRIVATE HOUSE

A house in course of construction, but so nearly finished that the owner began moving into it the next day, was a "private house," within the statute making it unlawful for a person to disturb the inhabitants of a private house by the use of loud, vociferous, obscene, vulgar, and indecent language. Crain v. State, 111 S. W. 150, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 617.

A restrictive building covenant, stipulating that the buildings erected on the premises shall be first-class "private houses" and shall stand back at least 20 feet from the street line, is not violated by moving a first-class dwelling to the rear of a first-class private house erected in accordance with the covenant, with a space between the two buildings. Barnett v. Vaughan Institute, 119 N. Y. Supp. 45, 46, 134 App. Div. 921.

PRIVATE HOUSEKEEPER

The proprietor of a private boarding house is a "private housekeeper," irrespective of the number of boarders he may keep. Huffman v. State, 92 S. W. 419, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 319 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Cuncannon [Pa.] 3 Brewst. 347).

PRIVATE INSTITUTION

"Private institutions" are those which are created or established by private individuals for their own private purposes. Public institutions are those which are created and exist by law or public authority. Some public benefits or rights may result from the institutions of private individuals or associations. So also some private or individual rights may arise from public institutions. The only sensible distinction between public and private institutions is to be found in the authority by which, and the purpose for which, they are created and exist." Mannington v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 153 (quoting and adopting definition in Toledo Bank v. Bond, 1 Ohio St. 623, 643).

PRIVATE INSTRUCTION

Rules of a stock exchange, by which a broker, who is a member thereof, is prohibited from receiving a certain class of legitimate orders, are in the nature of "private instructions" by him to his general agent for the brokerage business, and cannot be received, as against a client who is ignorant thereof, to limit the agent's authority. Newman v. Lee, 84 N. Y. Supp. 106, 107, 87 App. Div. 116.

PRIVATE LAW

See Private Act.

PRIVATE LODGING HOUSE

"There is a clear distinction between a mere 'private lodging house' and a 'hotel' where no meals are served. Such a 'hotel or inn' is a house, the proprietor of which holds out that he will receive all travelers and sojourners who are willing to pay a price adequate to the sort of accommodation provided, and who come in a situation in which they are fit to be received. The keeper of such a house is bound, without making any special contract therefor, to provide all to the limit of his facilities at a reasonable price; but the proprietor of a 'private lodging house' is not bound to receive all who apply, but he has the right to select his guests, contracting specially with each." Nelson v. Johnson, 116 N. W. 828, 829, 104 Minn. 440, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1259.

PRIVATE NUISANCE

A "private nuisance" is anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. Martin v. City of St. Joseph, 117 S. W. 94, 95, 136 Mo. App. 316; People v. Transit Development Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 297, 301, 131 App. Div. 174; Boyd v. Schreiner (Tex.) 116 S. W. 100, 103; Lazarus & Cohen v. Farmlly, 113 Ill. App. 624, 626; Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 55 S. E. 198, 200, 142 N. C. 300 (quoting and adopting Blackstone's definition).

Anything is a "private nuisance" done unlawfully or tortiously to the hurt or annoyance of the person, as well as the lands, tenements, and hereditaments of another. Hogle v. H. H. Franklin Mfg. Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 1094, 1097 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4855).

Any unwarrantable, unreasonable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, whereby it works a special injury to another in the use and enjoyment of his property, is a "private nuisance" for which the person injured may sue in his own name. Gus Blass Dry Goods Co. v. Reinman & Wolfert, 143 S. W. 1087, 1089, 102 Ark. 287.

"Private nuisances" are ordinarily considered as injuries to property rights by wrongful, unreasonable, and unlawful use of premises, so as to interfere with the enjoyment of another's premises. McCluskey v. Wile, 129 N. Y. Supp. 455, 457, 144 App. Div. 470.

"Private nuisances" are injuries that result from the violation of private rights and produce damages to but one or few persons. Russell v. State, 69 N. E. 482, 484, 32 Ind. App. 243.

A nuisance rendering the occupancy of dwellings materially uncomfortable is a "private" one as to each occupant, for which each may have an action. Meek v. De La-tour, 83 Pac. 300, 301, 2 Cal. App. 261.

An act or use of property to constitute a nuisance must violate some legal right, either public or "private," and must work some material annoyance, inconvenience, or injury, either actual or implied, from the invasion of the right. Thus the operation of trains over a spur track on lands outside the railroad's right of way is a nuisance if it keeps the adjoining owners in constant dread and makes their homes less valuable and comfortable. Thomason v. Seaboard Air-Line Ry., 55 S. E. 198, 200, 142 N. C. 300.

Where a city sewer contractor, in an unreasonable and oppressive manner, wantonly piled dirt from the sewer excavation in the street and on a vacant lot adjoining plaintiff's property so as to entirely deprive her of ingress and egress, and so as to precipitate surface water in large volumes onto her property and into her cellar, and failed to remove the same with reasonable diligence, such acts constituted a "private nuisance," for which plaintiff was entitled to recover. Frick v. Kansas City, 93 S. W. 351, 352, 117 Mo. App. 488.

Where the nuisance, though public, produces a special or particular injury to an individual, he may proceed in a court of equity for an injunction and also for damages. Any establishment, which, from its situation, the inherent qualities of the business, or the manner in which it was conducted, directly causes substantial injury to the property of another, or produces material annoyance and inconvenience to the occupants of adjacent dwellings, rendering them physically uncomfortable, is a "private nuisance." Tedescki v. Berger, 43 South. 960, 961, 150 Ala. 649, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060 (citing Woods, Nuis. [3d Ed.] p. 49, § 29; Ex parte Birchfield, 52 Ala. 377; 1 Wood, Nuis. p. 59, § 30; Givens v. Van Studdiford, 4 Mo. App. 499, 503, 505; Id., 72 Mo. 129; Marsan v. French, 61 Tex. 173, 48 Am. Rep. 272; Ahern v. Steele, 22 N. E. 193, 115 N. Y. 203, 5 L. R. A. 449, 450, 12 Am. St. Rep. 778; Cahn v. State, 20 South. 380, 110 Ala. 56; 1 High, Inf. [3d Ed.] § 782; 2 Wood, Nuis. [3d Ed.] pp. 1201, 1202, § 819; Id. p. 1160, § 792; Whaley v. Wilson, 20 South. 922, 112 Ala. 627).

Under a statute providing that "any fence or structure in the nature of a fence unnecessarily exceeding six feet in height, maliciously kept and maintained for the purpose of annoying the owners or occupants of adjoining property, shall be termed a 'private nuisance,'" one may erect upon his own land a fence as much higher than six feet as may be necessary to protect himself, his family, and his property from annoyances inflicted or threatened by his neighbor, but, if he build the fence still higher for the malicious purpose of annoying his neighbor, such extra height is unlawful and a "private nuisance." Healey v. Spaulding, 71 Atl. 472, 473, 104 Me. 122.

Public nuisance distinguished

A "private nuisance" is one that affects a single individual, or a determinate number of persons, in the enjoyment of some private right in contradistinction to the public.

Merchants' Mut. Tel. Co. v. Hirschman, 87 N. E. 238, 243, 43 Ind. App. 283.

PRIVATE PAPERS AND DOCUMENTS

The written prescriptions of practicing physicians on which a licensed druggist has sold liquor, and which he has preserved as required by law, are not his "private papers and documents," within the meaning of the constitutional guaranty against compulsory self-crimination. State v. Davis, 69 S. E. 639, 641, 642, 68 W. Va. 142, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 996.

A copy of the grand jury minutes as made by an official stenographer while in the possession of Deputy Attorney General in connection with the discharge by him of his official duties is probably a "private paper," within Penal Code, § 642, as to opening of private papers. In re Osborne, 117 N. Y. Supp. 169, 173, 174, 62 Misc. Rep. 575.

PRIVATE PARTS

The term "private parts" sufficiently describes the female organ of generation and its immediate vicinity, not only for that particular and limited portion anatomically known as the womb, but for the vagina, the urethra, and lips of the womb. Where an indictment for murder, committed while attempting to produce an abortion, charged in some of the counts that the instrument was thrust into the "body and womb," and in other counts into the "private parts and womb," of the deceased, and the proof showed that the instrument was not thrust into the womb, but was thrust into the private parts and bladder, there was not a fatal variance. Clark v. People, 79 N. E. 941, 943, 224 Ill. 554 (citing Baker v. People, 105 Ill. 452).

PRIVATE PARTY

A domestic public utility corporation is a "private party" as regards his property rights, and within St. 1898, § 3466, authorizing an action of quo warranto on the complaint of any private party. State ex rel. Green Bay Gas & Electric Co. v. Minahan Bldg. Co., 123 N. W. 258, 260, 141 Wis. 400.

By the use of the words "private parties," in Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330, 23 L. Ed. 424, holding that if the officers of the land department err in the construction of the law applicable to the case, or fraud is practiced upon them, or they themselves are chargeable with fraudulent practices, their rulings may be reviewed and annulled by the courts when a controversy arises between "private parties" founded upon their decisions, is probably meant such parties as have acquired the legal title and hold by private right. Jones v. Hoover, 144 Fed. 217, 220.

PRIVATE PASSWAY

See, also, Private Way.

A "private passway" is a means of passage for one or more individuals from some place to some other place. Seery v. City of Waterbury, 74 Atl. 906, 909, 82 Conn. 567, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 681, 18 Ann. Cas. 72.

PRIVATE PERSON

A "private person," referred to in Code Cr. Proc. § 395, providing that a confession, whether in the course of judicial proceedings or to a private person, may be proved against him unless made under the influence of fear produced by threats, or on a stipulation by the district attorney that he will not prosecute therefor, etc., means any person not engaged in the conduct of a judicial proceeding including public officers having accused in custody at the time they procured the confession in question. People v. Rogers, 85 N. E. 135, 141, 192 N. Y. 331, 15 Ann. Cas. 177.

PRIVATE PERSON, PARTNERSHIP, OR CORPORATION

Const. art. 15, § 3, providing that certain tidelands shall be withheld from grant or sale to "private persons, partnerships, or corporations," does not prohibit its grant to a municipal corporation, "private" qualifying each of the three words following it; though, when granted to a city, the prohibition protects it from grant or sale by the city to privates, except as it may be properly disposed of in furtherance of the trust on which it is held—that is, to subserve the public uses of navigation and fishery. Cimpher v. City of Oakland, 121 Pac. 374, 375, 162 Cal. 87.

PRIVATE POND

Ponds constructed in streams which are natural spawning grounds for trout and other fishes, and contain at all times trout and food fishes, are not "private ponds," within a statute permitting a person to establish a "private pond" to propagate fish on his own premises, where food fish do not naturally abound. State v. Dolan, 81 Pac. 640, 641, 11 Idaho, 256.

PRIVATE POWERS

See, also, Private Capacity.

Of municipality

Municipalities have two classes of powers, the one political, public, in exercise of which they govern their people and act as delegates of the state, the other private, is exercise of which they act for advantage of their inhabitants and themselves. City of Winona v. Botzet, 169 Fed. 321, 332, 94 C. C. A. 563, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 204.

PRIVATE PROPERTY

See Impairing Right to Private Property.

A landowner's right of egress and ingress to and from the street is private property, within Const. art. 1, § 16, providing that no "private property" shall be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Lund v. Idaho & W. N. R. R., 97 Pac. 665, 666, 50 Wash. 574, 126 Am. St. Rep. 916.

"Private property," forbidden by the Constitution to be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation, is not limited to the tangible subject-matter or corpus of the property, but includes the right of user and enjoyment, and when such rights are destroyed or taken for public use the owner is entitled to compensation. City of Belleville v. St. Clair County Turnpike Co., 84 N. E. 1049, 1051, 234 Ill. 428, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1071.

Animals ferre naturæ

Statutes regulating and restricting the capture of creatures ferre naturæ, not reduced to actual possession, are not violative of Const. § 17, declaring that "private property" shall not be taken without just compensation. Ex parte Fritz, 38 South. 722, 723, 86 Miss. 210, 109 Am. St. Rep. 700.

Building restriction

A valid building restriction is private property within Const. 1908, art. 13, § 1, which forbids the taking of "private property" for public use without the necessity thereof being first determined, and just compensation thereof being first made or secured in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. Allen v. City of Detroit, 133 N. W. 317, 320, 167 Mich. 464, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 590.

Easement

The easement of abutting owners in a public highway is "private property" which cannot be taken for private use, and hence, where abutting owners upon a public highway owned a fee to the center of the street, a manufacturing corporation could not construct a switch through the street to its plant. George Sweet Mfg. Co. v. Van Der Hoof, 121 N. Y. S. 842, 844, 137 App. Div. 192.

An owner of property abutting on a public street has a right therein entitling him to have the same continued as a public street for the benefit of his property, and this right constitutes an easement in the bed of the street, which attaches to the abutting property and is "private property," within the meaning of the Constitution, of which the owner cannot be deprived without compensation. Gillender v. City of New York, 111 N. E. Supp. 1051, 1053, 127 App. Div. 612.

The easement of a reclamation district or the construction of a levee is a right of way, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1240, enumerating the "private property" which may be taken under the right of eminent domain, and providing that rights of way shall be deemed private property for the purposes mentioned in section 1288, declaring that be right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of specified public uses, and hence the right of way procured by a reclamation district in the construction of a levee, together with the levee, may be taken by a railroad company under the right of eminent domain for its right of way, provided the right of way will not interfere with the right of way and levee of the district or affect the efficiency of its works. Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 90 Pac. 545, 546, 151 Cal. 263.

Municipal property

The water hydrants and electric light fixtures of the city are "private property" owned by it in its corporate capacity. They have a permanent situs within the drainage district and constitute "property" and "other property liable to assessment" within the meaning of chapter 80, Laws 1909. State v. Board of Com'rs of Shawnee County, 110 Pac. 92, 95, 83 Kan. 199.

Public office

A public office is not "private property." Mial v. Ellington, 46 S. E. 961, 971, 134 N. C. 131, 65 L. R. A. 697.

Railroad property

The right of way of a railroad company is "private property," within a statute providing for the taking of "private property" for public use. Boca & L. R. Co. v. Sierra Valleys Ry. Co., 84 Pac. 298, 304, 2 Cal. App. 546.

"A railroad's right of way is so far 'private property' as to be entitled to that provision of the Constitution which forbids it taking, except under the powers of eminent domain, and upon the payment of compensation." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 133, 142, 195 U. S. 540, 49 L. Ed. 312, 1 Ann. Cas. 517.

Code 1904, § 1294d, cl. 37, authorizes one railroad company to connect with another, and provides that the company making the connection must bear all expenses of operating the connection, etc., but does not require compensation to the company with which connection is made for the use of its property. Const. 1902, § 58, prohibits a law whereby private property is taken or damaged for public uses without just compensation. Held, that since a railway right of way is "private property" even to the public, except as to an interest and benefit in its uses, the land of a company with which connection is sought cannot be taken upon which to construct the connecting track for joint use against its consent without compensation; the Code provision being subordinate, and not repugnant, to the constitutional provision. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Interstate R. Co., 62 S. E. 369, 108 Va. 502.

"A corporation, in the eyes of the law, is a 'private individual,' so far as property rights are concerned." Hence the property of a railroad cannot be taken for private use. Mays v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 56 S. E. 30, 34, 75 S. C. 455.

The acquisition of a crossing by one railroad over another contemplates the taking of "private property" for public use, under the power of eminent domain. Wellsburg & S. L. R. Co. v. Panhandle Traction Co., 48 S. E. 748, 748, 56 W. Va. 18.

Tide lands

The interest which the grantee or lessee acquires after a grant or lease from the state of lands lying between high and low water mark is "private property" subject to condemnation. Woodcliff Land Imp. Co. v. New Jersey Shore Line R. Co., 60 Atl. 44, 45, 72 N. J. Law, 137; Shamberg v. Same, 60 Atl. 46, 72 N. J. Law, 140.

PRIVATE PURPOSE

Under Port District Act (Laws 1911, c. 92) § 4, authorizing a port district to lease terminal property to be acquired by it for a term not exceeding 30 years, where the purpose of such district in acquiring the property was not primarily to lease it, but rather to establish public wharves, a lease for a limited time, with power reserved to regulate wharfage charges, will not render the transaction one in which property is acquired by a municipality for a "private purpose," nor the giving of money or property, nor the leasing of the credit of the municipality to an individual or corporation, within the prohibition of Const. art. 8, § 7. Paine v. Port of Seattle, 127 Pac. 580, 582, 70 Wash. 294.

"The public or private character of a track or way depends upon the right of the public generally to its use, and not upon the extent of the exercise of that right. If such right is confined to a limited number only, it is a private use and a 'private track,' although such persons may use it an equal or unequal number of times each, while, if it is available to all the public who desire to use it for shipping purposes it is a public use, although some one or more of the public may use it more frequently than others." Where a railway switch, though used largely by a miller, is open to all persons for shipping purposes, it is a public and not a "private track." Wolfard v. Fisher, 87 Pac. 530, 48 Or. 479, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991 (citing Phillips v. Watson, 18 N. W. 659, 63 Iowa, 33; Bridal Veil Lumbering Co. v. Johnson, 46 Pac. 790, 30 Or. 210, 34 L. R. A. 368, 60 Am. St. Rep. 818; Towns v. Klamath County, 53 Pac. 604, 33 Or. 225; Elliott, R. R. [3d Ed.] § 961).

PRIVATE RAILROAD TRACK

A "private track" connected with a railroad is one not constructed or used for the purpose of traffic; for example, a spur or other track constructed and used only by a railway company for the purpose of reaching its gravel pit, or its shops, or its roundhouse, or for other similar purposes. The fact that the appellant acquired its right of way for this track by contract defining its rights, or that the purpose of constructing the track was to afford shipping facilities to a single industry, is not the test whether or not it is a private track. The test is whether its use is a public one. The appellant acquired by the contract the right to construct, maintain, and operate forever the spur track over the designated right of way from its main line of railway to the terminus of the spur, the quarries of the licensor, together with the necessary turnouts, switches, and sidings, with the further right, as against the licensor, to remove them after the spur ceased to be used for the purpose of transporting stone from the quarries, and, if so removed, the land to revert to the licensor. It appears from these provisions that the appellant is not bound in any contingency to remove the spur track, but may operate it forever for railroad purposes, substantially as if it had acquired the right of way by condemnation proceedings. The evidence in this case clearly shows that it has connected this spur track with, and made it a part of, its railway system, and devoted it to the purposes of traffic; to a public use. Such being the case, it is not a private track, and the appellant is subject to the same obligations and public control as to it as to its main line. State ex rel. Railroad & Warehouse Commission v. Willmar & S. F. R. Co., 93 N. W. 112, 114, 88 Minn. 448 (citing and adopting Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Porter, 46 N. W. 75, 43 Minn. 527; Barre R. Co. v. Montpelier & W. R. R. Co., 17 Atl. 923, 61 Vt. 1, 4 L. R. A. 785, 15 Am. St. Rep. 877).

PRIVATE RESIDENCE

As gambling house, see Gambling House.

The distinction between "private dwelling house" or "private residence" on the one side and a house built or occupied as a residence for two or more families is obvious, and a covenant by a grantee not to use the premises for any other purpose except for a private residence is violated by constructing a dwelling house designed to accommodate two families, and allowing two families to occupy the same. Koch v. Gorrusso, 75 Atl. 767, 768, 77 N. J. Eq. 172, 140 Am. St. Rep. 552.

"A residence may be a 'private residence,' although it be not occupied by a family." Williams v. State, 87 S. W. 1155, 1156, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 325.

Though a private residence is commonly resorted to for gaming, it is a "private residence," within Pen. Code 1895, art. 388, providing that no person shall be indicted for playing at a game at a private residence. Thompson v. State (Tex.), 96 S. W. 1085; Marks v. State, 101 S. W. 805, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 218.

A room back of a shop, in which a bachelor lives alone, is not a "private residence occupied by a family," within Acts 1901, p. 26, c. 22, arts. 379, 381, punishing gaming at any place other than at such a residence. Beard v. State, 101 S. W. 796, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 61.

A one-room house on a bachelor's land occupied solely by him is not within the exception of Acts 1901, p. 26, c. 22, punishing gaming at any place except a "private residence occupied by a family." Patterson v. State, 116 S. W. 1151, 1152, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 393.

The place at which defendant, a bachelor and farmer, played cards, a house occupied by him alone, except that a man, who was a stone mason, was stopping with him, was not a "private residence occupied by a family," within the exception to the gaming law (Laws 1907, p. 107, c. 49). Robbins v. State, 121 S. W. 504, 505, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 8.

"Private residence," within a statute prohibiting gaming in a place other than a private residence, includes a tent, owned by a saloonkeeper and situated near the saloon, occupied by an employé, who slept there, and occupied by no one else, though the public would go in and out of the tent. Hooper v. State (Tex.), 105 S. W. 816.

Under White's Ann. Pen. Code, arts. 839a, 845a, 845b, declaring that the term "private residence" shall be construed to be any building or room occupied and actually used at the time of the offense by any person or persons as a place of residence, it is not necessary that the family be personally present at the very time it is burglarized, in order to constitute the offense of burglary of a private residence. It is sufficient, if it is actually used at the time as a private residence, though at the time it was burglarized the family was temporarily absent. Handy v. State, 80 S. W. 526, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 406.

An indictment under Acts 1899, p. 318, c. 178, making it a separate and distinct offense to burglarize a private residence at night, and defining a "private residence" as any building or room occupied and actually used at the time of the offense as a place of residence, must allege that the building or room was occupied and actually used at the time of the offense as a place of residence, and an allegation that the house was a private residence is insufficient. Jones v. State, 36 S. W. 44, 45, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 100.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 839, provides that one who with intent to commit a felony breaks and enters a house in the daytime is guilty of burglary. Laws 1899, p. 318, c. 178 (Pen. Code 1895, art. 839a), provides that the offense of burglary of a private residence is constituted by entering a private residence, etc. Article 845b makes burglary of a private residence a distinct offense. One count of an indictment charged that defendant by force, etc., in the daytime, did burglariously and fraudulently break and enter a house then and there at the time of the commission of the offense occupied by W. as a private residence, etc. Held, that the use of the words "private residence" in that count did not bring the charge within the purview of article 839a. Martinez v. State, 108 S. W. 930, 931, 51 Tex. Cr. 584.

Pen. Code 1895, art. 838, provides that the offense of burglary is constituted by entering a house by force, threats, or fraud at night, or, in like manner, by entering a house during the day and remaining concealed therein until night, with intent in either case of committing felony or the crime of theft. Article 839 provides that he is also guilty of burglary who, with intent to commit a felony or theft, enters a house in the daytime. Article 839a (Laws 1899, p. 318, c. 178) provides that the burglary of a private residence is constituted by entering a private residence by force, threats, or fraud at night, or in any manner by entering a private residence at any time either day or night and remaining concealed therein until night with intent in either case of committing a felony or the crime of theft. Article 845a provides the punishment at a term of years not less than five for burglary of a private residence, and article 845b provides that nothing in articles 839a and 845a of the chapter shall be construed to alter or in any manner repeal articles 838 and 839, but shall be construed to make burglary of a private residence at night a separate and distinct offense from burglary as defined in said articles 838 and 839. Article 845c defines a private residence as mentioned in the preceding article to mean any building or room occupied and actually used at the time of the offense by any person or persons as a place of residence. Held, that the burglary of a private residence in the daytime is not within the terms of article 839a, and hence the indictment need not allege that the house was a private residence. Reyes v. State, 102 S. W. 421, 422, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 420.

Under Acts 26th Leg. (Laws 1899) p. 318, c. 178; article 839a, Pen. Code 1895, defining "burglary of a private residence"; article 845a, providing punishment therefor different from that provided for "burglary"; article 845c, defining a "private residence" as a building or room actually used at the time of the offense by any person or persons as a place of residence; and article 845b, providing that article 839a should be construed not as repealing articles 838 and 839 relating to ordinary "burglary," but as making "burglary of a private residence" a separate and distinct offense from "burglary"—an indictment in a prosecution for "burglary of a private residence," which charged that the house burglarized was occupied and actually used by a family as a private residence and that the house was occupied and controlled by a named person, was defective in not directly charging that the person named, or his family, actually occupied and used the house as a private residence. Lewis v. State, 114 S. W. 818, 819, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 636.

The house burglarized consisted of a storeroom which was subdivided by a partition, the front room being a restaurant, the middle room being used as a kitchen, and the rear room as a sleeping apartment for the tenant, his wife, and daughter, and the entry was made in the middle room and the articles stolen therefrom. Held, that the only part of the building used as a "private residence" was the sleeping apartment, so that the burglary was not a burglary of a private residence. Alinis v. State, 139 S. W. 980, 981, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 272.

An instruction in a prosecution for burglary which defines "private residence" as "a building actually occupied and used as a place of residence" is not erroneous, since placing the word "actually" before the word "occupied," instead of before the word "used," as in the statute, does not give to the words any different meaning. Dowling v. State, 140 S. W. 224, 225, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 366.

PRIVATE ROAD

As public use, see Public Use (In Eminent Domain).
See, also, Private Way.

There is no such thing, in the state of Kansas, as a "private road," in the sense that the land of one person can be appropriated to the exclusive use and ownership of another. The words "private road," therefore, when used in such sense, is an expression without force or meaning, and the mere fact that the word "private" is used in a petition and other papers, and proceedings relative to the establishment of the road, under Gen. St. 1901, § 6044, as a part of the description thereof, will not affect the validity of a road so established. Board of Com'rs of Johnson County v. Minnear, 83 Pac. 828, 829, 72 Kan. 326.

Way distinguished

"Private roads" are not to be understood as being synonymous with "ways" at common law, but as indicating a particular class of highways or public ways over which any one may pass without committing trespass. Hartley v. Vermillion, 74 Pac. 987, 991, 141 Cal. 339 (citing Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 241, 91 Am. Dec. 577).

PRIVATE SALE

The term "private sale," as used in the statute providing for the sale of pledged property, comprehends something more than a mere taking over of the property by the pledgee at such price as he may elect to consider an offer. It must be a sale conducted in the manner usually and ordinarily followed in relation to private sales of property.

Lowe v. Osmun, 86 Pac. 729, 732, 3 Cal. App. 387.

PRIVATE SCHOOL

As school, see School.

Where a parent in good faith employed a competent teacher formerly employed in the public schools to teach his child all the branches taught in the public schools at the regular public school hours, and the child attended the teacher's home regularly every school day, and received instruction equal to that which could have been received at the public schools, it was a compliance with the statute, requiring every parent to send his child to a public, "private," or parochial school, although the teacher did not advertise herself as keeping a private school, and had no regular tuition fixed, nor any school equipments, and made no arrangement to take other pupils. State v. Peterman, 70 N. E. 550, 551, 32 Ind. App. 635.

College

Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 72, requiring street railroads to transport "pupils of the public schools" at half rates, was amended by St. 1906, p. 653, c. 479, by the insertion of the words "or private" after the word "public." Held, that the word "private," as so used, included only such schools as were ejusdem generis with the public schools previously mentioned, namely, in which instruction was permitted to take the place of the compulsory instruction required in the public schools designated by Rev. Laws, c. 42, §§ 1, 2, and hence did not include education in a private business college. Commonwealth v. Connecticut Valley St. Ry. Co., 82 N. E. 19, 21, 196 Mass. 309.

The college created by Laws 1910, c. 119, creating a state normal college, is neither a "private school" nor a "common school" within Const. 1890, § 90, subd. "p," prohibiting any local law for the management or support of any private or common school. Turner v. City of Hattiesburg, 53 South. 681, 683, 98 Miss. 337.

PRIVATE SPORTS

"Private sports" are those which are engaged in for the entertainment and pleasure of those who participate, but "public sports" are those which are engaged in for the entertainment and pleasure of the public. Cheeves v. State, 114 Pac. 1125, 1126, 5 Okl. Cr. 361.

PRIVATE STATUTE

See Private Act.

PRIVATE STEALING

To constitute "privately stealing" from the person, the theft must be committed without the knowledge of the person from whom the property is taken, or it must be committed so suddenly as not to allow time to make resistance before the property is taken. Bush v. State, 109 S. W. 184, 186, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 213.

PRIVATE TRUST

A testamentary gift for masses for the repose of the souls of persons named and of the testator, to be said according to directions as to time and place of persons named, is not a "private trust" within St. 1898, § 2081, defining the purposes for which trusts may be created but is a "public charity." In re Kavanaugh's Estate, 126 N. W. 872, 874, 143 Wis. 90, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470.

PRIVATE USE

The management and use by a city of land along the sides of its streets and through a busy part thereof to promote the interests of merchants or traders who might occupy it, and to furnish better facilities for doing business and making profits, would not be a public, but a "private, use" thereof. A city cannot tax its inhabitants to obtain money to be used in acquiring property to obtain the possible income and profit that might inure to it from the ownership and control thereof. In re Opinion of Justices, 91 N. E. 405, 407, 204 Mass. 607, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483.

A taking of land by a corporation empowered to erect and operate plants for furnishing electric light and power and water to individuals and corporations in designated cities which has no franchise to enter the cities, and which is under no contractual obligation to furnish electricity to any person or for any purpose, is a taking for a private use, within Const. art. 1, § 16, declaring that private property shall not be taken for "private use." State ex rel. Tacoma Industrial Co. v. White River Power Co., 82 Pac. 150, 153, 154, 39 Wash. 648, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842, 4 Ann. Cas. 987.

PRIVATE WAY

Private way of necessity, see Way of Necessity.

See, also, Private Passway.

"There are different kinds of public ways and different kinds of private ways, but all ways are included in the one or the other general classification, though some may partake of the nature of both, being maintained and operated for private gain and for use by the public." "The common-law writers divided 'private ways' into several classes, according to the purpose or purposes for which the right of way could be used. Thus, Lord Coke, adopting the civil law, divided them into three kinds: A footway, called 'iter'; a footway and horseway, called 'actus'; and a cartway, which embraced the other two, called 'via'; to which was added a driftway—a road over which cattle could be driven. Woolrych also makes these four classes of ways: Footways; footways and horse-ways; foot, horse, and carriage ways; and driftways. But these old classifications of private ways are not exhaustive of the subject, for as a private way for any particular purpose could always be created by a grant, and in theory always rested upon a grant, it is evident that when one person granted to another a right of way extending from the land of the grantee over the land of the grantor, for the private use of the grantee, in any manner and for any particular purpose, a private way was created." A right of way for a private railroad across the lines of others, for a person or corporation engaged in the business of quarrying granite or other stone, is a private way. Jones v. Venable, 47 S. E. 549, 550, 120 Ga. 1, 1 Ann. Cas. 185.

A "private way" is an easement or right over or under another person's estate which belongs to and is for the use of individuals, one or more, as distinct from a way that is used by the public in general. Rice v. Wade, 111 S. W. 594, 595, 131 Mo. App. 338.

The phrase "private way," in Comp. Laws 1897, § 6234, par. 5, providing that no railroad shall be constructed on any "public street, lane, alley, highway, or private way" until compensation has been made, is not confined to private roads laid out under the statute, but includes all private ways, and includes a private way created by a conveyance of a designated tract, together with a right of way over a strip adjacent thereto, and a railroad acquiring the strip for a right of way with knowledge of the conveyance cannot construct a track thereon without first making compensation therefor. Detroit Leather Specialty Co. v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 113 N. W. 14, 15, 149 Mich. 588.

At common law a "private way" is a right of passage over or under another person's ground, which belongs to and is for the use of individuals, one or more, as distinct from a way that is used by the public in general, and such a way is an easement. Such a private way may be acquired by grant, reservation, prescription, or under a statute authorizing its establishment. Under Rev. St. 1901, par. 3956, declaring that all roads located as public highways by the supervisors, or roads in public use which have been recorded as public highways, shall be public highways, and all roads not coming within the foregoing provisions are vacated, and section 3972 authorizing the board of supervisors to lay out public or private roads in the manner therein prescribed, public highways are such only as come within the statutory provisions, and private roads are such as are duly laid out by the public authorities, and roads merely established without authority for the convenience of individuals are neither public nor private roads. Territory v. Richardson, 76 Pac. 456, 457, 8 Ariz. 336.

Easements of a "private way" lie in grant and must be created by written grant or its equivalent, as by express grant, implication, adverse use, etc., and one quality of a private way is that it must have a definite beginning and ending. Stevens v. Headley, 62 Atl. 887, 892, 69 N. J. Eq. 533.

The character of a "way," whether it is public or "private," is determined by the extent of the right to use it, and not by the extent to which that right is exercised. If all the people have the right to use it, it is a public way, although the number who may have occasion to exercise the right is very small. Railroad Commission of Texas v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas, 80 S. W. 102, 104, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 52 (citing Phillips v. Watson, 18 N. W. 659, 63 Iowa, 28).

Driveway or crossing

Where a road leads from the public road across a railroad to a house, and is used only by the owner and by the tenant of a neighbor, it is a "private way," and the railroad is not required to keep the crossing over such private way in repair, under Civ. Code 1902, § 2183, providing that a railroad crossing a highway shall protect its rails, so as to procure a safe passage across the road. Morgagne v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 58 S. E. 150, 151, 77 S. C. 437.

PRIVATE WRONG

"Private wrongs" are infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals, considered as individuals, and are frequently termed "civil injuries." United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 156 Fed. 182, 185 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 228, 146 U. S. 668, 36 L. Ed. 1128).

Especial privilege, see Especial.

See, also, Immunity.

The accepted meaning of the term "privilege" is a "peculiar advantage." In re Hopper, 132 N. Y. Supp. 730, 734, 73 Misc. Rep. 369. A special enjoyment of a good, or exemption from an evil or burden. Wisener v.

Burrell, 118 Pac. 990, 1001, 28 Okl. 546, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 755, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 356.

A "privilege" is said to be a particular or peculiar benefit enjoyed by a person, company, or class beyond the common advantages of other citizens, an exception or extraordinary exemption, or an immunity held beyond the course of the law. And again it is defined to be an exemption from some burden or attendance, with which certain persons are indulged, from a supposition of the law that their public duties or services, or the offices in which they are engaged, are such as require all their time and care, and that therefore, without this indulgence, those duties could not be performed to that advantage which the public good demands. State v. Cantwell, 55 S. E. 820, 823, 142 N. C. 604, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498, 9 Ann. Cas. 141 (dissenting opinion, citing Black, Dict. p. 941; Anderson v. Rountree [Wis.] 1 Pin. 118).

"A 'privilege,' as defined by the Standard Dictionary, is a peculiar benefit, favor, or advantage, a right * * * not enjoyed by all. * * * a special right or power conferred on or possessed by one or more individuals, in derogation of the general right." Leatherwood v. Hill, 89 Pac. 521, 523, 10 Ariz. 243.

Act May 3, 1909 (P. L. 417), requires exits, fire escapes, fire extinguishers, and fire preventives for buildings of a certain character such as theaters, public halls, and other places where persons assemble or the public resort, "other than buildings situated in the cities of the first and second classes." The provisions of the act are enforceable by state officers, no duty to be performed, nor responsibility to be incurred, being imposed upon any city, county, borough, or school district officer, and the fees of any such officer are not regulated thereby, and it has nothing to do with the revenues of counties, cities, or townships. Held, that the act grants no "powers" or "privileges" within Const. art. 3, § 7, providing that no law shall be passed granting powers or privileges in any case, where the granting of such powers or privileges shall have been provided by general law. A. L. Roumfort Co. v. Delaney, 79 Atl. 653, 655, 230 Pa. 874.

As between the grantor retaining the bed of a stream and the grantee of the ripa, with restrictions or limitations by contract as to boundaries or other express limitations of the natural riparian rights, the rights conveyed may perhaps be strictly called "easements" or "privileges," and not "riparian rights." Paterson v. East Jersey Water Co., 70 Atl. 472, 480, 74 N. J. Eq. 49.

Civil rights

Rev. St. § 5508, which provides that if two or more persons conspire to oppress, threaten, or intimidate "any citizen" in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his hav-ng so exercised the same, they shall be fined, etc., was not intended for the sole protection of the civil rights of citizens of African descent, depending entirely on the federal Constitution and laws passed in accordance herewith, but protected all citizens in the civil rights guaranteed and secured to them by the Constitution and laws of the United States. Felix v. United States, 186 Fed. 685, 89, 108 C. C. A. 503.

Exemption

Exemption from jury duty is a mere "privilege" or gratuity which may be subsequently revoked. State v. Cantwell, 55 S. E. 20, 821, 142 N. C. 604, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, 9 Ann. Cas. 141.

A contract exemption of a street railway company from paving obligations is not a "privilege" within the meaning of Laws N. J. 1867, c. 254, as amended by Laws 1879, c. 503, empowering a railway company, being the lessee of the property of another railway company, to acquire the whole of the latter's capital stock, in which case its "estate, property, rights, privileges, and franchises" shall vest in and be held and enjoyed by the purchasing corporation "fully and entirely, and without change or diminution." Rochester Ry. Co. v. City of Rochester, 27 Sup. Ct. 469, 472, 205 U. S. 236, 51 L. Ed. 84.

Exemption from taxation

The term "privileges," in a prohibition against a statutory grant of especial privileges, does not cover immunity from taxation unless the other provisions of the statute give such meaning to it. Board of Trustees of Whitman College v. Berryman, 156 Fed. 112, 21 (citing Pickard v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 640, 130 U. S. 642, 32 L. Ed. 1051).

While the term "privileges" has been held to include immunity from taxation in cases where other provisions of the statute in question have given such meaning to it, the better opinion seems to be that, unless their provisions remove the doubt of the intention of the Legislature to include the immunity in the term "privileges," it will not be so construed. Lake Drummond Canal & Water Co. v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 506, 39, 103 Va. 337, 68 L. R. A. 92 (quoting and adopting the definition in Morgan v. State of Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860; citing Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 244, 21 L. Ed. 326; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Hamblen County, 102 U. S. 73, 26 L. Ed. 162; Pickard v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 640, 130 U. S. 637, 32 L. Ed. 1051; Koekuk & W. R. Co. v. Missouri, 14 Sup. Ct. 592, 152 U. S. 31, 38 L. Ed. 450; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Miller, 5 Sup. Ct. 813, 114 U. S. 176, 29 L. Ed. 121; Norfolk & Western Ry. Co. v. Wendleton, 15 Sup. Ct. 413, 156 U. S. 667, 39 L. Ed. 574).

Franchise

A "privilege," as distinguished from a "power," is a right peculiar to the person or class of persons, on whom it is conferred. As applied to a corporation, it is usually synonymous with "franchise," and means a special right conferred by the state which does not belong to citizens generally of common right and which cannot be enjoyed or exercised without legislative authority. Northwestern Trust Co. v. Bradbury, 127 N. W. 386, 388, 112 Minn. 76 (quoting International Trust Co. v. American Loan & Trust Co., 65 N. W. 78, 632, 62 Minn. 501).

A "privilege" within the public utility law, whether a license, permit, or technically a franchise, is the latter in the statutory sense. Calumet Service Co. v. City of Chilton, 135 N. W. 131, 137, 148 Wis. 334.

"A franchise to operate a telephone is a 'privilege' to operate a 'public business.'" Lowther v. Bridgeman, 50 S. E. 410, 411, 57 W. Va. 306.

Inheritance

The inheritance tax law (Kirby's Dig. § 242), as amended by Act May 17, 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 832), provides that all property shall be subject to an inheritance tax at the rate thereafter specified, and further provides that, where property passes to strangers, the rate "on each and every $100 of the clear market value of all property and at the same rate for any less amount; on all estates of $10,000 and less, $3.00; on all estates of over $10,000, not exceeding $20,000, $4.00; on all estates over $20,000 and not exceeding $50,000, $5.00," and provides that an estate not exceeding $2,000 shall not be subject to taxation. Held, that the statute did not wholly exempt estates of over $50,000 from taxation, so as to conflict with Const. 1874, art. 16, § 6, forbidding the exemption of property from taxation, except as therein provided, but only the excess over that amount, and being a tax, not on the property, but on the privilege of inheritance, within Const. 1874, art. 16, § 5, authorizing the taxation of hawkers, etc., "and privileges in such manner as may be deemed proper," was not in violation of the requirements of the same section that all property should be taxed according to its value, equally and uniformly, no one kind higher than another, nor of the constitutional declaration (article 2, § 3) of the equality of all persons before the law. State v. Handlin, 139 S. W. 1112, 1113, 100 Ark. 175.

Lease

Where a lease provided a rental payable monthly for a certain term—"with the privilege at the same rate and terms each year thereafter from year to year," such lease did not entitle the lessee to a perpetual right of renewal, but constituted a letting from month to month after the expiration of the term specified. Tischner v. Rutledge, 77 Pac. 388, 35 Wash. 285.

A lease of land for oil and gas purposes which, after prescribing the royalty to be paid by the lessee on the oil and gas produced, and the payment of a stated sum per acre annually as advance royalties, provides that the lessee shall exercise diligence in developing the property and shall drill at least one well within 12 months, and that, should he fail to do so, the lease may be declared null, and void by the lessor after 10 days' notice, "provided that the lessee shall have the privilege of delaying operations for a period not exceeding five years * * * by paying * * * in addition to the required annual advanced royalty, the sum of one dollar per acre per annum," imposes no obligation upon the lessee to pay for such extension, but merely gives him an option to do so, and his failure to either drill the well or make the payment does not give the lessor a right of action to recover such payment. United States v. Comet Oil & Gas Co., 187 Fed. 674, 684, 685.

Preference right of creditor

The word "privilege" in the French statute, relating to the creation of a fund by foreign life insurance companies for the protection of local policy holders, means a preference to holders of insurance obligations over other debts in the distribution of the fund. Robinson v. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co., 182 Fed. 850, 853.

Civ. Code, art. 3095, provides that privileged creditors may seize and sell the property on which they have a privilege. Article 3186 defines privilege as a right which the nature of a debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to a preference. Act No. 66 of 1874 creates a pledge in favor of merchants and factors on shipments consigned to them, with the right of sale and of appropriation of the proceeds to the amount due them, which shall be superior to all privileges, except those for wages and rents. Held, that a firm of cotton factors, having a lien under Act No. 66 of 1874, are privileged creditors, within article 3095, as to shipments consigned to them, and are not affected by a respite granted to the consignor by a majority of his creditors. Ott v. His Creditors, 54 South. 44, 45, 127 La. 827.

The privilege against self-incrimination afforded by Const. Amend. 5, is purely personal to the witness, and he cannot claim the privilege of another person or of the corporation of which he is an officer or employee. McAlister v. Henkel, 28 Sup. Ct. 385, 201 U. S. 90, 50 L. Ed. 671.

The word "privilege" as applied to the exclusion of testimony of a husband or wife, under Rev. Codes 1905, § 7253, providing that a husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent, nor can either, without the consent of the other, be examined as to any communications made by one to the other during the marriage, implies an option or a right of waiver. Luick v. Arenda, 182 N. W. 353, 362, 21 N. D. 614.

PRIVILEGE TAX

A collateral inheritance tax is a "privilege tax," imposed on the right of acquiring property by succession, within Acts 1907, c. 902, § 28, conferring on county courts jurisdiction to try and determine cases involving delinquent privilege taxes. Knox v. Emerson, 181 S. W. 972, 973, 123 Tenn. 409.

Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082, provide that certain corporations, including gas companies, shall, in addition to other taxes, annually pay a tax on their franchise to the state and a local tax thereon to the county, town, etc., where the franchise is exercised; and each corporation shall report the amount of tangible property in the state, and where situated, and assessed and the fair cash value thereof; and the board of valuation and assessment is required to fix the value of the capital stock of each corporation and from such amount deduct the assessed value of all tangible property assessed in the state; the remainder to be the value of its corporate franchise subject to taxation, etc. By another provision all the property of domestic corporations, including intangible property considered in determining the value of the franchises, shall be subject to taxation unless exempt by the Constitution. Held, that within Const. § 174, requiring the property of corporations and natural persons to be similarly taxed, and allowing such further license, income and franchise taxes as the Legislature may deem proper, the tax on the franchise of a gas company was a "property tax" on the intangible property, and not a "privilege tax" for engaging in a business that natural persons could not, since under section 4082 natural persons engaged in such business are taxed as such corporations are. Commonwealth ex rel. Auditor's Agent v. Louisville Gas Co., 122 S. W. 164, 165, 135 Ky. 324.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION

Attorney and client

The relation of attorney and client must exist, and the communication must be made to enable the attorney to properly conduct the suit, or to better advise his client, to constitute "privilege." Moyers v. Fogarty, 119 N. W. 159, 165, 140 Iowa, 701.

Communications between attorney and client, to be "privileged," must be made during the existence of the actual relation or during interviews and negotiations looking to the establishment of such relationship, and must relate to professional advice. Lanasa v. State, 71 Atl. 1058, 1064, 109 Md. 602.

A "privileged communication" between an attorney and his client must relate to some matter as to which the client is seeking advice, or be made in order to put the attorney in possession of information supposed to be necessary to enable him to properly and intelligently serve his client. Where the transaction between the attorney and client is the preparation of a deed or contract in accordance with the directions of the client and no legal advice is asked or required, the reasons or motives moving the client to make the deed or contract, if stated to the attorney, are not privileged. The execution of a will and its contents are within the rule governing privileged communications during the life of a testator, but the rule ceases at his death, and the attorney may then disclose all that affects the execution and tenor of the will except such facts as would tend to invalidate the will. An attorney instructed by a client to draw a will so as to devise the property to a child may testify that the client stated that she was the mother of an illegitimate child not mentioned in the will. Champlon v. McCarthy, 81 N. E. 808, 811, 228 Ill. 87, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1052, 10 Ann. Cas. 517 (citing De Wolf v. Strader, 26 Ill. 225, 79 Am. Dec. 371; Smith v. Long, 106 Ill. 485; Hatton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. [31 Mass.] 416, 25 Am. Dec. 415; 4 Wig. Ev., § 2314).

Where a testator stated to his attorney during a consultation as to drawing a will that the debt of a certain person, which was released by the will, was secured by a deed of that person's property to the testator, the statement was a "privileged communication," and, in an action, by the one whose debt was released to cancel the deed, the attorney could not testify to such fact, since plaintiff did not claim under the will and could not waive the privilege of the client. Emerson v. Scott, 87 S. W. 369, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 65.

That a client gives his attorney notice of his place of residence does not affect the attorney's professional employment, and is not a "privileged communication," within Code Civ. Proc. § 835, which the attorney cannot be compelled to disclose, for the purpose of service of an order on such client. Richards v. Richards, 119 N. Y. Supp. 81, 82, 64 Misc. Rep. 285.

The delivery by the widow of a deceased owner of a map of a block platted by the deceased to the attorney for the estate of the deceased was not a "privileged communication" from client to attorney. Myers v. Kenyon, 93 Pac. 888, 890, 7 Cal. App. 112.

Where a railroad's general attorney employed local counsel to try a suit, the contents of a letter received by such local counsel from his employer relating to an issue arising at the trial was "privileged." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Williams, 96 S. W. 1087, 1089, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 549 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 237).

A report of the superintendent of defendant's plant, where plaintiff was employed when injured, concerning the accident, sent to defendant's attorneys before any action had been brought or threatened, was not inadmissible as a "privileged communication." Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Knight, 56 S. E. 725, 727, 106 Va. 674.

Communications which pass between one who is merely acting as a conveyancer or friendly advisor and the grantor, or grantee, are not "privileged communications" under a statute which protects communications which pass between attorney and client in the course of professional employment. Later v. Haywood, 85 Pac. 494, 496, 12 Idaho, 78.

Husband and wife

A husband's written acknowledgment to his wife that, on the collection of a note payable to himself and received on the sale of their joint property, he would owe her a fixed sum, is not inadmissible as a privileged communication, under the common law or under Code Va. 1904, § 3346a, subsec. 3, since the rule of privilege does not apply to communications between husband and wife respecting a business matter in which he acts as her agent. Lurty's Curator v. Lurty, 59 S. E. 405, 407, 107 Va. 466.

Minister or priest

Under the express provisions of the statute, in order to make statements to a minister of the gospel inadmissible, they must be made to him in his professional character and in the course of discipline enjoined by the rules of practice of the denomination. Communication, to be "privileged," must be made by the penitent as an enjoined religious discipline and a confession made to a clergyman not in the course of such discipline is not privileged. State v. Morgan, 95 S. W. 402, 404, 196 Mo. 177, 7 Ann. Cas. 107 (citing Whart. Law of Ev. § 597; Knight v. Lee, 80 Ind. 203).

Physician and patient

Information obtained by a physician to enable an insurance company to determine whether a person examined is a proper risk is not "privileged" by Code Civ. Proc. § 834. Lynch v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 116 N. Y. S. 998, 999, 132 App. Div. 571.

Where plaintiff's leg was crushed by being run over by a car of one of defendant's railroad trains, which facts were known and not in dispute, a statement made by plaintiff to defendant's physician who came to treat his injury as to the manner in which his foot came to be caught under the wheel was not a privileged communication within Civ. Code Neb. § 333 (Comp. St. Neb. 1901, § 5907), which prohibits a physician from disclosing "any confidential communication properly intrusted to him in his professional capacity and necessary and proper to enable him to discharge the functions of his office," having no relation to the treatment of the injury, and the exclusion of such statement when offered in evidence was error. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Castle, 172 Fed. 841, 845, 97 C. C. A. 124.

The intent in enacting the statute providing that a physician cannot without the consent of his patient be examined in a civil action, as to any information acquired in attending the patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe for the patient, was not that all information, whether by communication or otherwise, obtained by physicians from their patients, should be privileged, but such information only as may reasonably be necessary to enable the physicians to apply their full professional skill for their patient's benefit, which information is "privileged," although it may be a narrative of the facts leading to an accidental injury. Thus, where one injured in alighting from a street car stated to his physician that he was standing on the lower step, expecting to get off, but the car kept on going, and he got off and was thrown to the ground; that he did not tell the conductor to stop, but thought that he always did stop, and therefore jumped off and fell on his left side and could not get home without assistance, the information was not necessary to enable the physician to treat the injury and was not a "privileged communication." But where physicians also made a physical examination of his person to enable them to treat his injury, the information obtained thereby was a "privileged communication." Mausen v. Utah L. & Ry. Co., 105 Pac. 799, 801, 803, 36 Utah, 528.

Witness

Statements by a passenger injured in alighting from a street car, on the day of the injury, to her physician, as to how the injuries occurred, in the presence of her daughter and another, were in the nature of "privileged communications" within a statute declaring that physicians, as to matter communicated to them as such, by patients in the course of their professional business, shall not be competent witnesses, and she was not obliged to testify thereto on cross-examination. And though the persons present were competent to testify to such statements, the physician could not do so without the patient's consent. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Thomas, 88 N. E. 356, 859, 44 Ind. App. 468 (citing Post v. State ex rel. Hill, 42 N. E. 1120, 14 Ind. App. 452; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Shepard, 65 N. E. 765, 80 Ind. App. 193; George v. Hurst, 68 N. E. 1031, 31 Ind. App. 660; Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Wiler, 100 Ind. 92, 50 Am. Rep. 769; Masons' Union Life Ins. Ass'n v. Brockman, 59 N. E. 401, 26 Ind. App. 182; Springer v. Byram, 36 N.

E. 361, 137 Ind. 15, 23 L. R. A. 244, 45 Am. St. Rep. 159).

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION (In Libel and Slander)

A "privileged communication" is one in which the words are not defamatory. Cleveland Leader Printing Co. v. Nethersole, 95 N. E. 735, 739, 84 Ohio St. 118, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 978.

A "privileged communication" is one fairly made by a person in the discharge of some private or public duty, legal or moral, or in the conduct of his own affairs, in matters where his interest is concerned. Ashcroft v. Hammond, 90 N. E. 1117, 1119, 197 N. Y. 488.

A libelous communication is regarded as "privileged" if made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest or in reference to which he has a duty if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains criminating matter which without this privilege would be slanderous and actionable; and this though the duty be not a legal one but only a moral or social duty of imperfect obligation. Overton v. White, 93 S. W. 363, 372, 117 Mo. App. 576 (quoting and adopting definition in Byam v. Collins, 19 N. E. 75, 111 N. Y. 143, 2 L. R. A. 129, 7 Am. St. Rep. 726).

To give words a privileged character, they must be spoken in discharge of some public or private duty with that end in view, or in conduct of some matter involving the speaker's own interest and for its protection, and they must be proper in that connection and be uttered in good faith, in the honest belief that they were true. Burch v. Bernard, 120 N. W. 33, 34, 107 Minn. 210.

A libelous communication is regarded as privileged, if made bona fide, upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains incriminating matter which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable; and this, though the duty be not a legal one, but only a moral or social duty of imperfect obligation. Kersting v. White, 80 S. W. 730, 734, 107 Mo. App. 285 (citing Byam v. Collins, 19 N. E. 75, 111 N. Y. 143, 2 L. R. A. 129, 7 Am. St. Rep. 726); Overton v. White, 93 S. W. 363, 372, 117 Mo. App. 576 (quoting and adopting definition in Byam v. Collins, 19 N. E. 75, 111 N. Y. 143, 2 L. R. A. 129, 7 Am. St. Rep. 726).

In Hix v. State (Tex.) 20 S. W. 550, the definition of a "privileged communication" from Ormsby v. Douglas, 37 N. Y. 477, is quoted approvingly as follows: "The rule is well settled that a communication which would otherwise be slanderous and actionable is privileged if made in good faith upon a matter involving an interest or duty of the party making it, though such duty be not strictly legal, but an imperfect obligation to a person having a corresponding interest or duty." Stayton v. State, 78 S. W. 1071, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 205, 106 Am. St. Rep. 988.

An alleged libel is a "privileged communication" if made on proper occasion, through proper motives, on reasonable cause, and in the proper manner. The immunity of a privileged communication is an exception to the general rule that nothing short of proof of the truth is a defense to libel. Mulderig v. Wilkes Barre Times, 64 Atl. 636, 637, 215 Pa. 470, 114 Am. St. Rep. 967.

In determining whether a communication is privileged, the court must consider the exigencies of the situation of the party making the communication as to whether they warranted the charges made for the protection of the interest such party had under his control, or whether the language, under the circumstances, was warranted or was of such a nature and character as to indicate an abuse of privilege. Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union, 121 S. W. 100, 106, 222 Mo. 556, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1080.

Statements in response to inquiries as to another person, when the inquirer is one naturally interested in such person's welfare, are privileged under Civ. Code 1910, § 4436, par. 2, declaring statements made in the performance of a private duty either legal or moral privileged communications. Whitley v. Newman, 70 S. E. 686, 687, 9 Ga. App. 89.

Where one to whom an inquiry is addressed regarding another communicates bona fide without malice to the inquirer facts regarding the one inquired about, the communication is "privileged"; and hence one is justified in giving in good faith his opinion of the integrity and standing of a tradesman in response to an inquiry concerning him. Melcher v. Beeler, 110 Pac. 181, 184, 48 Colo. 283, 139 Am. St. Rep. 273.

Where an employer is requested by the father of a discharged employé, who, though of age, is living with her father as a member of his family and under his care and protection, to state the reason why his daughter was discharged, the reply of the employer would be "privileged"; but, if the employer voluntarily states to the father the reason why the discharge was made, the statement would not be "privileged." Rosenbaum v. Roche, 101 S. W. 1164, 1165, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 237.

One may publish by speech or writing whatever he honestly believes is essential to the protection of his own rights or those of another, provided the publication be not unnecessarily made to others than to those whom the publisher honestly believes are concerned in the subject-matter of the publication. The statement must be no broader and the publication no wider than the interest to be subserved demands. Care must be taken not only to keep the statement within proper limits as to its subject-matter, but also that it be not made to those who are wholly without interest in the matter. To make the defense of "privilege" complete in an action of slander or libel, good faith, and interest to be upheld, a statement properly limited in its scope, a proper occasion, and publication to proper persons must all appear. The absence of any one or more of these constituent elements will, as a general rule, prevent the party from relying on the privilege. When a railway company discharges a conductor, and it comes to its knowledge that there are still in his possession tickets of the company which were delivered to him while in its employment, which he at that time had a right to sell, and which he refuses or fails to surrender, the company has a right, in order to protect its own interest, to take such precautions as are reasonably necessary to prevent the use of the tickets by persons not entitled to use them. Shetfall v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 51 S. E. 646, 648, 123 Ga. 589.

Classes

See Conditionally Privileged; Qualified Privileged; Qualified Privilege.

Privileged communications fall into two classes, those absolutely privileged, such as the opinions of judges, and others qualifiedly privileged, such as publications made to protect the rights of the one publishing. Allen v. Earnest (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1101, 1104.

"Privileged communications" are of four classes, to wit, where the publisher of the slander acted in the bona fide discharge of a public or private, legal or moral, duty, or in the prosecution of his own interests; second, statements by an employer with reference to the character of a servant who has been in his employment; third, words used in the course of a legal or judicial proceeding; and, fourth, publications duly made in the course of parliamentary proceedings. Williams Printing Co. v. Saunders, 73 S. E. 472, 476, 113 Va. 156, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 693.

The "privileged communications," recognized in the law of slander and libel as freeing the speaker or writer from liability, are of two classes: The one where the privilege is absolute, and the other where the privilege is conditional. "The characteristic feature of absolute, as distinguished from conditional, privilege, is that in the former the question of malice is not open. All inquiry into good faith is closed." Wilson v. Sullivan, 7 S. E. 276, 81 Ga. 243. In every case of conditional privilege, if the privilege is used merely as a cloak for venting private malice, and not bona fide in promotion of the object for which the privilege is granted, the party defamed has a right of action.

Atlanta News Pub. Co. v. Medlock, 51 S. E. 756, 759, 123 Ga. 714, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139.

The proceedings of legislative bodies, of courts, and of military and naval tribunals are "privileged." In these cases the privilege is said to be absolute. The second class of privileged publications or communications is said to be conditionally privileged from the fact that the privilege depends upon the good faith of the party making the defamatory publication. Cases of conditional or qualified privilege may be divided into three general classes, viz.: (1) Fair reports of the proceedings of courts and legislative bodies; (2) where the defendant, in good faith, in the performance of a duty, makes a communication to another to whom he owes the duty; (3) where one who has an interest in the subject makes a communication relating thereto to another having a corresponding interest. Publication in a newspaper of remarks made, at a meeting of a city council, by the city's representative in the state assembly, purporting to give information as to the conduct of the representative of the city in the state senate with reference to passage of city charter amendments, is not "privileged," though the newspaper be the official paper of the city, the article being a mere voluntary unofficial report, published as a matter of news, especially where the paper circulated outside the city and the senator's district. Buckstaff v. Hicks, 68 N. W. 403, 404, 94 Wis. 84, 59 Am. St. Rep. 853.

"Privileged communications" are either absolutely privileged so that no action will lie, though it be averred that the injurious publication was both false and malicious, or are privileged to the extent that the circumstances are held to preclude any presumption of malice, but leaves the party responsible if both falsehood and malice are affirmatively shown. Speaking generally, absolutely privileged communications are confined to legislative proceedings, judicial proceedings in the established courts of justice, acts of state, and acts done in the exercise of military and naval authority. All other privileged communications are only conditionally privileged. Anything that an officer says in a report to his superior in the discharge of his duty is privileged unless plaintiff both avers and proves that the words were used maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause on the part of the officer to believe them true. Ranson v. West, 101 S. W. 885, 886, 125 Ky. 457 (quoting Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] 425; Townsh. Sland. & L. § 209).

When one undertakes to find a definition of "privilege, or conditional privilege," it is very difficult to find one that is satisfactory. The reconciliation of the two classes of cases—those in which motive is material and those in which motive is not material—is to be sought in an extension of the concept of privilege, as understood in the law of libel, or in a coherent application of the idea of justification or excuse. The conception of privilege in the law of defamation is that an individual may with immunity commit an act which is a legal wrong, and but for his privilege would afford a good cause of action against him; all that is required, in order to raise the privilege and entitle him to protection, being that he shall act honestly in the discharge of some duty which the law recognizes, and shall not be prompted by a desire to injure the person who is affected by his act. United States v. Smith, 173 Fed. 227, 228.

Inference of malice

A privileged communication is one made under such an occasion as rebuts the inference arising prima facie from a statement therein prejudicial to the character of another, and the latter must prove the existence of express malice. Holmes v. Royal Fraternal Union, 121 S. W. 100, 106, 222 Mo. 566, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060.

"The meaning in law of a 'privileged communication' is that it is made on such an occasion as rebuts the prima facie inference of malice arising from the publication of matter prejudicial to the character of the plaintiff, and throws upon him the onus of proving malice in fact, but not of proving it by extrinsic evidence only. He has still a right to require that the alleged libel itself shall be submitted to the jury, that they might judge whether there is any evidence of malice on the face of it. Konkle v. Haven, 103 N. W. 850, 852, 140 Mich. 472 (citing Bacon v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 33 N. W. 181, 66 Mich. 166).

A "privileged communication" means nothing more than that the occasion of making it rebuts the prima facie inference of malice arising from the publication of matter prejudicial to the character of the plaintiff, and throws upon him the onus of proving malice in fact, but not of proving it by extrinsic evidence only. He has still a right to require that the alleged libel itself shall be submitted to the jury, that they may judge whether there is evidence of malice on the face of it. Where plaintiff had resigned his position, and his resignation had been accepted, and his employment terminated, several days before the writing of the letter which purported to discharge him, a communication to defendant's agent, reciting that plaintiff had been discharged from his employment for cause, that defendant would not again give him a position under any circumstances, and that he was "a dirty dog and a traitor," known by the writer to be false, and intended to prevent plaintiff's success in his endeavor to go into business for himself, was not privileged. National Cash Register Co. v. Salling, 173 Fed. 22, 28, 97 C. C. A. 334 (quoting and adopting definition

"A 'privileged communication' is a communication made on such an occasion as rebuts the prima facie inference of malice arising from the publication of matter prejudicial to the character of the plaintiff, and throws upon him the onus of proving malice in fact, but not of proving it by extrinsic evidence only. He has still a right to require that the alleged libel itself shall be submitted to the jury, that they may judge whether there is evidence of malice on the face of it." An insurance agent is not such a public character that the plea of privilege is available in an action for libel of him. The defense of privilege is not available to a libel published in a newspaper, where it would not be available were it published otherwise. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co., 100 N. W. 887, 872, 124 Iowa, 707.

"The proper meaning of a 'privileged communication' is said to be this: That the occasion on which it was made rebuts the inference arising, prima facie, from a statement prejudicial to the character of the plaintiff, and puts it upon him to prove that there was malice in fact, and that the defendant was actuated by motives of personal spite or ill will, independent of the circumstances in which the communication was made" (quoting and adopting Klinck v. Colby, 46 N. Y. 427, 7 Am. Rep. 360). "A 'privileged communication' is an exception to the rule that every defamatory publication implies malice. A qualified privilege is extended to a communication made in good faith upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, either legal, moral, or social, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, and the burden of proving the existence of malice is cast upon the person claiming to have been defamed" (quoting and adopting Newell, Sland. & L.). A communication between officers of a corporation on the subject of the conduct of one of its servants is "privileged." Denver Public Warehouse Co. v. Holloway, 83 Pac. 131, 133, 34 Colo. 432, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696, 114 Am. St. Rep. 171, 7 Ann. Cas. 840.

Civ. Code, § 47, defines a "privileged communication" as one without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested; one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information; and section 48 declares that the "malice" so referred to is not inferred from the communication or publication. Held, that "malice" as used in section 47 meant malice in fact, or a libel published with an actual, malicious intent. Davis v. Hearst, 116 Pac. 530, 540, 160 Cal. 143.

Particular kinds of cases

A newspaper publication, to be "privileged" as a publication of judicial proceedings, must be fair; that is, just, impartial as to the party complaining, and reasonably correct. Jones v. Pulitzer Co., 144 S. W. 441, 445, 240 Mo. 200.

The rule that a fair account of the whole proceedings in a court or before a public magistrate, sitting publicly, is a privileged communication, whether the proceedings are on a trial or on a preliminary and ex parte hearing, implies that there must be a hearing of some kind, and, in order that the ex parte nature of the proceedings may not destroy the privilege, there must be at least so much of a public investigation as is implied in a submission to the judicial mind with a view to judicial action. Brown v. Globe Printing Co., 112 S. W. 462, 482, 213 Mo. 611, 127 Am. St. Rep. 627.

Same—Judicial proceedings

Under Civ. Code § 47, providing that a "privileged communication" is one made in any legislative or judicial proceeding, but irrelevant or immaterial matter voluntarily or maliciously published in the course of judicial proceedings is not privileged, a district attorney conducting a criminal case in a justice's court is not "privileged" to charge opposing counsel with perjury or subornation of perjury. Carpenter v. Ashley, 83 Pac. 444, 445, 148 Cal. 422, 7 Ann. Cas. 601.

Civ. Code, § 45, defines libel as a false and unprivileged communication exposing a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned and avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation. Section 47 enumerates as a privileged publication one made in any legislative or judicial proceeding, or in any other official proceeding authorized by law. Held that, where minority stockholders in a corporation sued plaintiff as its president for alleged illegal management, an allegation in the complaint that plaintiff was guilty of misappropriation and embezzlement of the corporation's funds was relevant to the inquiry, and was therefore privileged, even if section 47 be construed as only making such allegations in a judicial proceeding privileged as are relevant to the inquiry. Gosewisch v. Doran, 119 Pac. 656, 657, 161 Cal. 511, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 442.

Same—Public official proceeding

There is no practical difference in the meaning of "public official proceedings" and "proceedings authorized by law" as applied to privileged communications, and an investigation by a Senate committee of charges against one, appointed to office by the President and whose appointment has been sent to the Senate for confirmation, falls within the meaning of the latter term as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2239. Tuohy

v. Halsell, 128 Pac. 126, 127, 35 Okl. 61, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323.

PRIVILEGED OCCASION

A "privileged occasion" in the law of libel is one on which a privileged person is entitled to do something which no one not within the privilege is entitled to do on that occasion. In the case of absolutely "privileged occasion," the weight of authority seems to hold that it is immaterial whether the person making the libelous statement was actuated by malice or not, though there is a respectable line of authority which holds to the view that proof of express malice in making a libelous statement will render the publisher liable. Ferdon v. Dickens, 49 South. 888, 894, 161 Ala. 181.

Occasions when for the public good and in the interests of society one is freed from liability that would otherwise be imposed upon him by reason of the publication of defamatory matter are "privileged occasions." A witness while testifying under oath in a court of justice is not subject to prosecution for slander for any statement that he may make upon the subject under consideration. Whether words otherwise actionable as defamatory are privileged is a question of law for the decision of the court, depending upon the circumstances of their utterance or publication. Sebree v. Thompson, 103 S. W. 374, 375, 126 Ky. 223, 11 U. R. A. (N. S.) 723, 15 Ann. Cas. 770.

PRIVILEGED PUBLICATION

Under section 47, Civ. Code, a "privileged publication" is one made in a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive of the communication innocent, or who is requested by the party interested to give the information. Publication of a false criminal charge concerning a candidate for public office by a member of the community is not privileged. Dauphiny v. Buhne, 96 Pac. 880, 882, 153 Cal. 757, 126 Am. St. Rep. 136.

St. 1898, § 4256a, providing that the publisher of a newspaper shall not be liable for the publication of a true "report of any judicial, legislative, or other public official proceeding," enacted after a decision of the Supreme Court denying any privilege to reports of city council proceedings, does not change the common law defining the privilege of publications of judicial proceedings, and the publication of a pleading to which no judicial action has been invited is not privileged, though the words "judicial proceedings" may be used to include everything involved in a civil action, including the service and filing of a pleading, since the words are used only in their common-law significance relating to libel. Hasley v. Sentinel Co., 113 N. W. 425, 426, 133 Wis. 20, 126 Am. St. Rep. 928.

PRIVILEGES AND FACILITIES

Granted by carrier

The furnishing of lumber for bulkheads for a grain car was not the furnishing of "privileges or facilities" within Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 6, 24 Stat. 380 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3156) as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 2, 34 Stat. 586 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1906, p. 1153), requiring the schedules filed by a carrier with the Interstate Commerce Commission to state the privileges and facilities granted or allowed by the carrier, and the fact that a carrier's printed schedule did not show that bulkheads were furnished in grain cars would not prevent a shipper, who furnished material for constructing bulkheads in cars furnished him for shipping grain, in order to make the cars available for use, from recovering the expense of such bulkheads from the carrier; the carrier being under a common-law obligation to pay such expense. Loomis v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 138, 141, 147 App. Div. 186.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES

See, also Special Privilege; Special Privilege or Immunity.

"The 'privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states' are those privileges and immunities which are, in their nature, fundamental; which belong, of right, to the citizens of all free governments; and which have, at all times, been enjoyed by citizens of the several states which compose this union, from the time of their becoming free, independent, and sovereign. They may be all comprehended under the following general heads: Protection by the government, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject, nevertheless, to such restraints as the government may prescribe for the general good of the whole." Browner v. Irvin, 169 Fed. 964, 967 (quoting and adopting definition in Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, 380, 6 Fed. Cas. 546; quoted in Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 36, 21 L. Ed. 394, and in Hodges v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 203 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 65); Shaw v. City Council of Marshalltown, 104 N. W. 1121, 1123, 131 Iowa, 128, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 825, 9 Ann. Cas. 1039 (citing and adopting definition in Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, 6 Fed. Cas. 546).

The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the federal Constitution operate on state action only, and the privilege and immunity clause applies to privileges and immunities arising out of the nature and essential character of the federal Government, and granted or secured by the Constitution, and the provision is satisfied if all persons similarly situated are treated alike in privileges conferred or liabilities imposed; the words "immunity" and "privilege" referring to a right conferred peculiar to some individual or body, or an affirmative act of selection of special subjects of favors not enjoyed by citizens in general under the federal Constitution or laws. Hammer v. State, 89 N. E. 850, 851, 173 Ind. 199, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 140 Am. St. Rep. 248, 21 Ann. Cas. 1034.

The "privileges and immunities" referred to in Const. Ind. art. 1, § 23, prohibiting any law granting privileges or immunities to one class of persons which upon the same terms are not open to all citizens, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1, prohibiting the abridgment of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, are general abstract personal rights, in their nature fundamental and pertain to all citizens in free governments, and which they are entitled to enjoy throughout the several states as well as in the state of residence, such as freedom of travel, pursuit of any lawful vocation or of pleasure, enjoyment of life and liberty, acquisition of property, the right to control it in security and peace, and the right to resort to the courts for its protection without restriction other than those usually affecting all persons. Strange v. Board of Com'rs of Grant County, 91 N. E. 242, 173 Ind. 640; Id., 91 N. E. 506.

"Privileges and immunities" of a citizen within the guarantees of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, involve the right not only to be free from physical restraint, but the right to follow any lawful business or avocation in life and to make all proper contracts in furtherance thereof. Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 30, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105.

The due process clause of the fifth amendment of the Constitution applies only to privileges and immunities arising out of the natural character of the national government, or those specifically granted to all citizens and persons by the Constitution of the United States, and those fundamental rights which are inherent to all are privileges and immunities of state citizenship only and not within the protection of the fifth amendment. Watson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 169 Fed. 942, 946.

The words "privilege and immunity," as used in the Illinois Constitution, providing that the General Assembly shall not pass any special law granting any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise whatever, include all the rights which the state government was created to establish and every right which can be conferred or granted by any law of the state, and by that provision of the Constitution a guaranty is given that all valid enactments of the Legislature shall operate uniformly on persons and property, and all citizens are assured the equal protection of the laws of the state. Jones v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 83 N.

E. 215, 216, 231 Ill. 302, 121 Am. St. Rep. 313.

Action by states

The "privileges and immunities" protected by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, § 1, are only those arising under the federal Constitution, and not under the state Constitution or laws. People ex rel. Lasher v. City of New York, 118 N. Y. Supp. 742, 744, 134 App. Div. 75.

The rights, privileges, and immunities which the fourteenth constitutional amendment and Rev. St. § 1979, for its enforcement, were designed to protect, are such as belong to citizens of the United States as such, and not as citizens of a state. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1747, which authorizes proceedings for the appointment of guardians for the persons and estates of minor children having no guardians by will or deed, is a lawful exercise of the state's power; and proceedings based thereon, by which parents are deprived of the custody of their children, do not give them a right of action against the persons instituting the proceedings, under Rev. St. § 1979, for depriving them of rights, privileges, or immunities secured to them by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Wadleigh v. Newhall, 136 Fed. 941, 946 (citing Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 130, 133, 139, 21 L. Ed. 442).

Business regulations

Kirby's Dig. § 6886, which provides that any person, either as owner, manufacturer, or agent, who, without a license, shall travel in any county, and peddle certain specified articles, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, but that the section shall not apply to any resident merchant in said county, is in conflict with Const. Ark. art. 2, § 18, providing that the General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which on the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens. Ex parte Deeds, 87 S. W. 1030, 1031, 75 Ark. 542.

A city ordinance prohibiting any one from peddling fruits, vegetables, etc., within the fire limits of the city, excepting farmers disposing of produce grown by themselves—there being no element of taxation involved—is a violation of Const. art. 1, § 12, prohibiting any law granting to any citizen or class privileges or immunities which on the same terms shall not equally belong to all. Ex parte Camp, 80 Pac. 547, 549, 88 Wash. 393.

Exemption from self-incrimination

Exemption from self-incrimination, though secured as against federal action by Const. U. S. Amend. 5, is not one of the fundamental rights of national citizenship, so as to be included among the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States which the states are forbidden by the fourteenth amendment to abridge. Twining v. State of New Jersey, 29 S. Ct. 14, 19, 211 U. S. 78, 53 L. Ed. 97.

Exemption from taxation

Liquor dealers are not denied the "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States," under Const. U. S. Amend. 14, because producers or manufacturers of domestic wines are exempted by Rev. Civ. St. Tex. 1895, art. 50601, while such wines are in their hands, from the tax imposed and the bond required by preceding articles regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. Cox v. State of Texas, 26 Sup. Ct. 671, 673, 202 U. S. 446, 50 L. Ed. 1099.

Fisheries

A statute which provides that the owners of tidelands and riparian owners above tide water on certain rivers shall have the exclusive right of fishing, in so far as it attempts to vest in such owners the exclusive right to fish in navigable waters, is in violation of the Constitution, providing that "no law shall be passed granting to any citizen privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens," in that it grants a monopoly in a lawful and uninjurious business which may be conducted as of common right. Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1073, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 132.

The right to take fish from the tide waters of a state is a property right and not a mere "privilege" of citizenship, and, since the title to the bed of all tide waters in the state is in the state as trustee for its citizens, the state may impose such conditions on the right to take fish therefrom as it sees fit, notwithstanding the license fee exacted from aliens is higher than that required of its own citizens. Leong Mow v. Board of Com'rs for Protection of Birds, Game, and Fish, 185 Fed. 223.

The right to fish in the waters of a state is not a "privilege" to which citizens in the several states are entitled, under Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, pt. 1, providing that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges of the citizens in the several states. State v. Tower, 24 Atl. 898, 84 Me. 444.

Municipal contracts

A municipal ordinance, requiring all contracts for the building of public works involving the use of dressed stone to require the work of dressing stone to be done within the territorial limits of the state, is not violative of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, entitling the citizens of each state to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several states. Allen v. Labsap, 87 S. W. 926, 928, 188 Mo. 692, 3 Ann. Cas. 306.

Office

"The 'privileges and immunities' which are protected by the constitutional inhibition concern the personal and private rights of the citizen, such as his right to acquire and possess property, to pursue ordinary callings, and secure happiness and safety, etc., and do not include within their meaning the right to hold office. The state may decline to confer official power on residents of other states without depriving such nonresidents of any 'privilege' or 'immunity' protected by the Constitution of the general government." In re Mulford, 75 N. E. 345, 346, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 3 Ann. Cas. 986.

The right of a nonresident to be appointed administrator or executor is not a "privilege or immunity," the denial of which is prohibited by the federal Constitution. In re McWhirter's Estate, 85 N. E. 918, 920, 235 Ill. 607; In re Mulford, 75 N. E. 345, 346, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 3 Ann. Cas. 986.

Act March 8, 1910, creating a municipal plans commission to be formed from members of various city boards and by appointment by the mayor from eligibles nominated by 14 different associations, clubs, and corporations in the city, all of the members to be citizens of the city, was not in violation of Const. art. 1, § 12, prohibiting the passing of any law granting to any citizen, class of citizens or corporation, other than municipalities, privileges or immunities which, on the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens or corporations, on the theory that the privilege of nomination granted to the organizations mentioned was not granted to the members of other similar organizations; the right to make such nominations not being one of the "privileges or immunities" granted by the Constitution. Bussell v. Gill, 108 Pac. 1080, 1083, 58 Wash. 468, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1070.

Pollution of stream

The alleged right of a riparian proprietor to pollute a stream flowing over his land or along the boundary thereof is not a "privilege" or "immunity" which he enjoys as a citizen of the United States, as distinguished from those of a citizen of the state in which the land and stream are situated. Commonwealth v. Emmers, 70 A. 762, 764, 221 Pa. 298.

Quarantine

Laws Or. 1907, p. 383, c. 223, regulating the importation of sheep from other states and providing for the treatment and quarantine of sheep affected with scabies, etc., was equally applicable to the citizens of all states without discrimination, and was therefore not in conflict with Const. art. 4, § 2, guaranteeing to the citizens of each state the "privileges and immunities" of the citizens of the several states. Adams & Bryson v. Lytle, 154 Fed. 876, 878 (citing Reid v. Colorado, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 187 U. S. 187, 47 L. Ed. 106).

Sale of intoxicating liquors

"The privileges and immunities" guaranteed to the citizens by the federal Constitution relate to those rights which may be called fundamental, those which belong of right to all citizens of a free government, and which have, at all times, been enjoyed by the citizens of the several states. The right to sell intoxicating liquors by retail is not a privilege of a citizen of the state or of the United States. Meehan v. Board of Excise Com'rs of Jersey City, 64 Atl. 689, 690, 73 N. J. Law, 382.

The right to sell intoxicating liquors is not one of the privileges or immunities attaching to citizenship in the United States. State v. Durein, 80 Pac. 987, 988, 70 Kan. 13.

The right to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors is not one of "privileges" guaranteed to the citizen by the state or federal Constitution. State v. Baker, 92 Pac. 1076, 1078, 50 Or. 381, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040.

An ordinance interdicting the sale of intoxicating liquors in a private room does not, by making an exception in favor of hotels, contravene Const. art. 1, § 21, inhibiting laws granting privileges which on the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens; this not being applicable to a business which may lawfully be prohibited. Sandys v. Williams, 30 Pac. 642, 645, 647, 46 Or. 327.

Saloon regulations

A statute making it an offense to permit a female under the age of 21 years to remain in a saloon is not invalid because of the fact that a female attains her majority at the age of 18; the right to enter and remain in a saloon not being one of the equal privileges granted to every citizen. State v. Baker, 92 Pac. 1076, 1078, 50 Or. 381, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040.

Sunday laws

The "privileges and immunities" guaranteed to the citizens of the United States by the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution are those which arise out of the nature of the general government, its Constitution, or the laws made in pursuance thereof, and these are placed by the Constitution under the protection of Congress; but the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the states, with those exceptions, embrace, generally, those fundamental rights, for the security and establishment of which society is instituted; and they remain under the care of the state governments. The privileges and immunities involved under a statute prohibiting certain trades and amusements on Sunday belong to that class characterized as those of the citizens of the state, and are not referred to by the federal Constitution. They do not arise out of the nature of the general government, its constitution, or laws. State v. Dolan, 92 Pac. 995, 998, 13 Idaho, 393, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1259.

PRIVITY—PRIVY

"Privity" denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property.

Withers v. Wabash R. Co., 99 S. W. 34, 37, 122 Mo. App. 282 (quoting and adopting definition in Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 418); Ottensoser v. Scott, 37 South. 161, 163, 47 Fla. 276, 66 L. R. A. 346, 110 Am. St. Rep. 137, 4 Ann. Cas. 1076; Pond v. Pond's Estate, 65 Atl. 97, 98, 79 Vt. 352, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212 (quoting and adopting 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189); Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 445, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (quoting and adopting definition in McDonald v. Gregory, 41 Iowa, 516); Logan v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 64 S. E. 515, 516, 82 S. C. 518; Lamar County v. Talley (Tex.) 127 S. W. 272, 276.

The several classes of "privities" are as follows: Privities in estate, as donor and donee, lessor and lessee, and joint tenants; privities in blood, as heir and ancestor, and copartners; privities in representation, as executor and testator, administrators and intestate; and privities in law, that is where the law without privity of blood or estate casts the land upon another as by escheat. Other privities are given as privities in tenure between landlord and tenant; privity in contract alone or in the relation between lessor and lessee, or heir and tenant in dower, or by the courtesy by the covenants of the latter after he has assigned his claim to a stranger; privity in estate alone, between the lessee and the grantee of the reversion; and privity in both estate and contract, as between lessor and lessee. Ottensoser v. Scott, 37 South. 161, 163, 47 Fla. 276, 66 L. R. A. 346, 110 Am. St. Rep. 137, 4 Ann. Cas. 1076; Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 218, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314 (citing Buckingham v. Ludlum, 37 N. J. Eq. 137, 141; Douglass v. Howland [N. Y.] 24 Wend. 35-53); Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 445, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. [16th Ed.] § 189).

The term "privity" denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property. An action by a tenant of an abutting owner against an elevated railroad for injuries to easements brought within 20 years after the commencement of the operation of the railroad, does not interrupt the running of limitations against the owner, and he cannot after the expiration of more than 20 years from the commencement of the operation of the railroad maintain an action for injury to easements. Goldstrom v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 100 N. Y. Supp. 911, 913, 115 App. Div. 323.

"Privity" expresses a condition where one knows or believes that another contemplates committing an act, and wrongfully conceals such knowledge, or pays no attention to the information, or covertly aids in the work. Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912, 916.

The term "privity," within the rule that color of title must purport to convey title to the claimant thereunder or to those with whom he is in privity, means privity of possession and not privity in blood, for a "privity in blood" is one who derives his title by descent, and applies to a real title which can descend and not to a mere colorable title. Barrett v. Brewer, 69 S. E. 614, 616, 153 N. C. 547, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5608).

"Privity" denotes merely a succession of relationships by deed or other act or by operation of law. Where land held by a widow's husband adversely was awarded, after his death, to the widow as a part of her homestead, and she thereafter continued to occupy the same adversely, her possession was not adverse, but in subordination to the rights of her husband's heirs, and was therefore properly tacked to the possession of her husband in order to complete the period of adverse possession in their favor. Atwell v. Shook, 45 S. E. 777, 779, 133 N. C. 387.

Where C., owning a roadbed, leased rolling stock from the A. Co., at a specified mileage rental, the C. Company having control of the trains, operators, etc., while on its tracks and being primarily and solely responsible for the damages to property or injuries to passengers arising from any accidents to the trains while on its line, there was a privity between the two companies in so far as they were liable to a passenger for injuries; the term "privity" being used to denote mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property, or those so connected with the parties in estate as to be identified with them in interest, and consequently affected by them. Jenkins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 179 Fed. 535, 537 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5606-5611).

The knowledge or privity of the managing officer or agent of a corporation is the knowledge or privity of the corporation within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4283, providing for the limitation of liability of shipowners for losses caused without their privity or knowledge. In re Jeremiah Smith & Sons, 193 Fed. 395, 397, 113 C. C. A. 391.

"Privies" are "all who have mutual or successive relationship to the same rights; * * * persons whose interest in an estate is derived from the contract or conveyance of others; * * * those who have mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property or subject-matter; those whose relationship to the same right of property is mutual or successive." Tolliver v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 187 Fed. 795, 797, 109 C. C. A. 643 (quoting and adopting definition in 32 Cyc. 388).

"Privies" are those who have mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property or subject-matter, such as personal representatives, heirs, devisees, legatees, assignees, voluntary grantees, or judgment creditors or purchasers from them with notice of the fact. Johnson v. Stebbins-Thompson Realty Co., 76 S. W. 1021, 1027, 177 Mo. 581; Withers v. Wabash R. Co., 99 S. W. 34, 37, 122 Mo. App. 282 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. National Subway Co. v. St. Louis, 46 S. W. 981, 145 Mo. 551, 42 L. R. A. 113).

Where the claimant of land derived all of his title thereto by descent or purchase from the person to whom the tax deed was originally issued, there was such privity between them that whatever was binding on the latter was binding on the former; the term "privity" denoting mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property, operating by descent or by voluntary or involuntary transfer, and all privies being bound because they have succeeded to some estate which was bound in the hands of its former owner. Towle v. Quante, 92 N. E. 967, 969, 246 Ill. 568 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5607).

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 734, providing that an appeal shall be granted as a matter of right on the application of either party or his "privity," on filing with the clerk a copy of the judgment, and section 745, declaring that an appeal shall not be granted, except within two years next after the right to appeal first accrued, the attorneys representing the estate of the deceased defeated party may within two years after judgment file a copy of the judgment and take out the appeal, acting for the estate, and thereafter the administrator may revive the appeal in his name as administrator; the word "privity" including those claiming under the party, such as heirs and devisees. Davis v. Catlettsburg-Kenova-Ceredo Water Co., 123 S. W. 335, 336, 136 Ky. 66.

"Privies" are persons who are partakers of or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another. Roarke v. Roarke, 75 Atl. 761, 763, 77 N. J. Eq. 181.

Plaintiffs claimed a certain double lot under a will, by which testator devised the lot to their father for life, with remainder to them. Defendant claimed that the will referred only to the north half of the lot, and that she held the south half thereof by virtue of a deed from the testator, left in escrow for her and drawn pursuant to a contract for her benefit, entered into between the testator and the mortgagor of such south half, and under which she was required to make rent payments to the testator during his life. In an action of ejectment brought by the father against defendant, the mortgagor testified for defendant. Thereafter the mortgagor died. The ejectment action was never brought to trial. Held, in an action to recover the property, that the mortgagor's testimony in the action of ejectment was competent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 830, which permits the evidence given on a former trial by a witness since deceased to be used in an action relating to the same subject-matter between the same parties or their legal representative; the remainderman being a privy of the life tenant. Shook v. Fox, 110 N. Y. Supp. 951, 954, 126 App. Div. 565 (citing Jackson ex dem. Bates v. Lawson, 15 Johns. [N. Y.] 539, 543).

In action or judgment

"Privy" is defined to be a mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property, and within the rules relating to the conclusiveness of judgments all persons are "privies" to a judgment whose succession to the rights of property thereby adjudicated was derived through or under one or other of the parties to the action, and accrued subsequent to the commencement of that action. Lamar County v. Talley (Tex.) 127 S. W. 272, 276 (citing 23 Cyc. p. 1253).

"Privies," in such sense that they are bound by a judgment, are those who acquired interest in the subject-matter after the rendition of the judgment. Kahn v. Richard L. Walsh Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 137, 139, 72 Misc. Rep. 20.

"The term 'privy' denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property. The ground therefore upon which persons standing in this relation to the litigating party are bound by the proceedings to which he was a party is that, if they are identified with him in interest and whenever this identity is found to exist, all are alike concluded." Perkins v. Goddin, 85 S. W. 936, 940, 111 Mo. App. 429.

"To make a man 'privy' to an action he must have acquired an interest in the subject of the action either by inheritance, succession, or purchase from a party subsequently to the action or he must hold property subordinately." Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 445, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (quoting and adopting definition in Bigelow, Estop. [5th Ed.] p. 142).

No one is "privy" to a judgment whose succession to the rights of property affected by the judgment occurred previously to the institution of the suit. Calculagraph Co. v. Automatic Time Stamp Co., 154 Fed. 166, 167 (citing Ingersoll v. Jewett, 16 Blatchf. 378, 13 Fed. Cas. 45); Schuler v. Ford, 80 Pac. 219, 220, 10 Idaho, 739, 109 Am. St. Rep. 233, 3 Ann. Cas. 336 (citing 1 Freem. Judgm. [4th Ed.] § 162); Northwestern State Bank v. Silberman, 154 Fed. 809, 814, 83 C. C. A. 525 (citing Freeman, Judgm. par 162). Thus a party in possession of land under contract to purchase is not in "privy" with the party who contracted to sell, in the sense that he will be bound by the judgment affecting such property, where the action was commenced subsequent to entering into such contract.

Schuler v. Ford, 80 Pac. 219, 220, 10 Idaho, 739, 109 Am. St. Rep. 233, 3 Ann. Cas. 336.

Where sellers of a threshing outfit delivered the same to the buyer under a conditional sale, reserving title in the sellers until paid for, the sellers, by delivering possession to the buyers, did not become their privies, so that a judgment against the buyers in a suit by their employes to enforce a thresher's lien for services, given by Civ. Code, § 3061, would not bind the sellers, who were not made parties to the proceedings; a "privy" being defined as one whose succession to the rights of property affected occurred after the institution of the particular suit and from a party thereto or who claims under or in right of parties, as an executor or administrator. Holt Mfg. Co. v. Collins, 97 Pac. 516, 519, 154 Cal. 265.

A judgment is conclusive between the parties thereto and their privies in a second action on the same claim or cause of action, as to all questions that were, or might have been, litigated in the first action, and is likewise conclusive in a second action upon a different claim or cause of action, as to every proposition within the issues at first, which was presented for adjudication and decided. In this rule the mere personal effect is confined to the parties, while the term "privy" suggests mutual succession or relation to the same property or property right. Rowell v. Smith, 102 N. W. 1, 3, 123 Wis. 510, 3 Ann. Cas. 773.

The term "privy" denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property, and purchasers of articles made by the defendant in a suit for infringement of a patent after the decree therein are not privies to such decree, nor protected thereby as such. Hurd v. Seim, 189 Fed. 591, 600.

The ground of "privy" is property, not personal relation. Absolute identity of interest is essential to "privy." The fact that two parties as litigants in two different suits happened to be interested in proving or disproving the same facts creates no privy between them. In some of the cases, the word is used somewhat inaccurately to denote the relation and the consequences thereof between principal and agent, and unless the sense in which the word is used is kept in mind we are apt to be led into confusion and error. Logan v. Atlanta & C. A. L. R. Co., 64 S. E. 515, 516, 82 S. C. 518 (quoting Bigelow, Estop. p. 142; Freem. Judgm. § 162; Smith v. Moore, 7 S. C. 215, 24 Am. Rep. 479).

Where promoters of a mill company guaranteed to a subscriber that the company to be organized would within a year establish a tiling plant or he could have his money returned, and he refused to pay a balance of the subscription because of the company's failure to establish the plant, and obtained judgment in an action by the company for the balance, no such "privity" existed between the promoters and the company as would bind them by the judgment against the company. Broadus v. Russell, 49 South. 327, 329, 160 Ala. 353 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5606 et seq.).

A voluntary grantee with knowledge of the facts is a "privity" to a judgment against his grantor, so that he has no right to go back of the judgment and set up defenses to the claim on which it is based. Johnson v. Stebbins-Thompson Realty Co., 76 S. W. 1021, 1027, 177 Mo. 581.

Where a wife brings an action in her own right for personal injuries, there is no privity between her and her husband, and therefore a judgment in such action does not bar an action by him for the loss of society, companionship, and services of his wife. Wompach v. City of St. Louis, 100 S. W. 443, 449, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140.

"Privity" depends upon the relation of the parties to the subject-matter, rather than their activity in a suit relating to it after the event. Participation in the defense because of general or personal interest in the result of the litigation does not make one privy to the judgment. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 217, 218, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314.

"Privies," within the rule that privies to the record are entitled to a writ of error, means the heirs, executors, administrators, terre-tenants, or those having an interest in remainder or reversion, or one who is made a party by the law, as he who comes in as a vouchee. Carney v. Superior Court, 74 Atl. 1018, 1021, 30 R. I. 276.

"Privies," within the rule that a writ of error may not be prosecuted by one not a party or privy to the record, etc., means heirs, executors, administrators, terre-tenants, remaindermen, reversionsers, or those made parties by law, and does not comprehend a stockholder of a corporation against which judgment has gone. White Brass Castings Co. v. Union Metal Mfg. Co., 83 N. E. 540, 541, 232 Ill. 165, 122 Am. St. Rep. 63.

"Privity," so far as concerns the effect of a judgment over property rights, does not arise from mere relationship by blood or affinity, nor because two parties may have an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation. The term implies relationship by succession or representation between a party to the first action and a party to the subsequent action in respect to the matter adjudicated in the first action. Thus where, in a proceeding for letters of administration, a party intervened claiming to be the decedent's widow, and this issue was decided adversely to her, the decree was not binding on her son claiming to be a son and heir of the decedent, since there was no "privity" between him and his mother. Sorenson v. Sorenson, 96 N. W. 837, 839, 68 Neb. 483.

The question of who is concluded by a judgment has been obscured by the use of the words "privity" and "privies," which in their precise technical meaning in law are scarcely determinative always of who is and who is not bound by a judgment. Courts have striven sometimes to give effect to the general doctrine that a judgment is only binding between parties and privies by extending the signification of the word "privies" to include relationships not originally embraced in it, whereas the true reason for holding the issue res judicata does not necessarily depend on "privity," but on the policy of the law to end litigation by preventing a party who has had one fair trial of a question of fact from again drawing it into controversy. Taylor v. Sartorius, 106 S. W. 1069, 1094, 130 Mo. App. 23.

"Privies in blood" denotes privity between heir and ancestor. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 218, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314 (citing Buckingham v. Ludlum, 37 N. J. Eq. 187, 141; Douglass v. Howland [N. Y.] 24 Wend. 35-53).

The term "privity," within the rule that color of title must purport to convey title to the claimant thereunder or to those with whom he is in privity, means privity of possession and not privity in blood, for a "privity in blood" is one who derives his title by descent, and applies to a real title which can descend and not to a mere colorable title. Barrett v. Brewer, 69 S. E. 614, 616, 153 N. C. 547, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5608).

In contract

A contract between two parties based on a valid consideration may be enforced by third parties when entered into for their benefit, though such parties are not named in the contract nor privy to the consideration. It is sufficient to create the necessary privity of contract that the obligee owe to the parties to be benefited some obligation or duty, legal or equitable, which would give them a just claim. City of St. Louis v. G. H. Wright Contracting Co., 101 S. W. 6, 7, 202 Mo. 451.

In estate

"The term 'privity' denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same right of property." "A 'privity' in estate is a successor to the same estate, not to a different estate in the same property." Letters written by a husband, prior to his joining with his wife in a deed of trust conveying the wife's real estate, in which he had an inchoate dower right and homestead right, tending to show that he had, as trustee, invested trust funds in the land, were admissible against the grantee; the latter being a "privity" in state to the husband. Lang v. Metzger, 69 N. E. 493, 498, 206 Ill. 475 (quoting and adopting definitions in 1 Greenl. Ev. § 180; Pool v. Morris, 29 Ga. 374, 74 Am. Dec. 68).

"Privies in estate" are donor and donee, lessor and lessee, and joint tenants, but joint tortfeasors are not privies in estate, and one of several joint tortfeasors sued by the person injured cannot plead by way of estoppel a judgment in favor of another joint tortfeasor rendered in an action by the person injured. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 218, 103 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314.

To constitute privity of estate as applied to the assignee of a lease, the latter must have acquired legal title to the term or have taken possession. In the latter case, such possession constitutes sufficient title to establish the relation of privity of estate, and makes him liable for the rent unless he shows he is a mere undertenant. Comley v. Ford, 14 S. E. 447, 448, 65 W. Va. 429.

To constitute one the privy by estate of another, it must appear that he succeeded after the bringing of the action by which he is sought to be concluded to an estate or interest held by the party to the judgment. Minnesota Debenture Co. v. Johnson, 102 N. W. 381, 182, 94 Minn. 150, 110 Am. St. Rep. 354.

"A 'privy in estate' is one who derives from another title to property. He comes in by succession to property by contract or law. It is identity of title. The privy in estate takes property under another. To make one person a privy in estate to another, that other must be predecessor in respect to the property in question from whom the privy derives his right or title, a mutual or successive relationship." Smith v. White, 60 S. E. 404, 105, 63 W. Va. 472, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 530 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5609).

A "privy in estate," so as to be bound by a judgment affecting realty in an action to which he was not a party, is one whose title is derived from a party bound by the judgment. Hungate v. Hetzer, 111 Pac. 183, 184, 83 Kan. 265.

Of possession

To show privity of possession so as to avail of the color of title of a prior occupant, the later occupant must enter under the prior one and obtain his possession either by purchase or descent from him. Barrett v. Brewer, 69 S. E. 614, 616, 153 N. C. 547, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 403 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5609).

Executor or administrator and testator or intestate

The term "privy," as defined by Greenleaf (1 Greenl. Ev. § 189), denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. In the classification usually stated as found privies in representation, which include executor and testator, administrator, and intestate. An administrator or executor takes legal title to the personal property not in his own right, but as trustee for a particular purpose. When an estate consists entirely of personal property, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust exists between the executor and the legatee, and in litigation affecting the amount or value of such an estate the administrator or executor represents the legatee, and the privity between them is complete. The privity between them is the privity of trustee and cestui que trust, which, it is said, was classified in the old books as "privity of person." The real estate, however, descends directly to the heir, and the interest of the administrator is in the nature of a naked conditional power, and the privity between them as to such property is slight or none at all. Where a claimant seeking to establish a claim against a decedent was estopped from asserting her claim as against a third person who had contracted for the estate of the decedent consisting of personalty, the executor of the decedent, being in privity with the third person, was entitled to avail himself of defense of estoppel. Pond v. Pond's Estate, 65 Atl. 97, 98, 79 Vt. 352, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212 (citing Rap. & L. Law Dict.).

Executors or administrators appointed in different jurisdictions

The term "privy" denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. Lord Coke divides privies into three classes: Privies in estate, privies in law, and privies in blood. The only principle upon which the doctrine of estoppel applies to one party because of his privity with another is that the party claiming through another is estopped by that which estopped that other respecting the same subject-matter. Thus, the executors and the administrator with the will annexed are in privity with the testator, and are estopped by judgments and prescriptions that prevail for or against him, because they each derived the property they are respectively administering from him. But there is no privity between Illinois executors and a Kansas administrator, because none of the property which the latter is administering was derived from the former, and none of the property which the former is administering was derived from the latter, so that an estoppel against or in favor of the latter does not relate to the same subject-matter with which the former is dealing, and they are not privies in estate. They received their authority from different sovereignties over different property. They are accountable to different courts which are acting under different laws. The authority of the executors is paramount and that of the administrator is nothing in Illinois. The authority of the administrator is paramount and the executors are without authority in Kansas. Hence they are not "privies" in law. They are certainly not privies in blood, and the result is that they are not privies at all. Wilson v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 164 Fed. 817, 820, 90 C. C. A. 593, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 553 (citing Greenl. Ev. [16th Ed.] § 189).

The term "privity" denotes mutual succession or relationship to the same rights of property, and administrators of the estate of the same person appointed in different jurisdictions are not privies. Richards v. Blaisdell, 106 Pac. 732, 735, 12 Cal. App. 101.

Joint tort-feasors

"Privies in representation" are executor and testator, or administrator and intestate, but joint tort-feasors are not privies in representation, and one of several joint tort-feasors sued by the person injured cannot plead by way of estoppel a judgment in favor of another joint tort-feasor rendered in an action by the person injured. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 219, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314.

A decree of a federal Circuit Court sitting in New York, dismissing a suit in personam brought against one of two joint tort-feasors, is not denied full faith and credit by the refusal of a Massachusetts court to give it effect as a bar to a suit upon the same facts against the other, who was not a resident of New York, and not a party to the first suit, where such refusal was rested upon the ground that, under the general law—whatever might be the rule in New York—the relationship between two joint tort-feasors was not such as to make the one not sued a party by either "privity" or representation, this being a jurisdictional question which the Massachusetts court was at liberty to determine for itself. Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 641, 643, 225 U. S. 111, 56 L. Ed. 1009, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 875.

Tenants in common

"In the law of estoppels, privity signifies merely succession of rights—that is, the devolution in whole or in part of the rights and duties of one person upon another: * * * the derivation of rights by one person from and holding in subordination to those of another, as in the case of a tenant. No one can be bound by or take advantage of the estoppel of another, who does not succeed or hold subordinate to his position." Tenants in common are not in privity to each other, so as to entitle them to take advantage of an estoppel by judgment obtained by one co-tenant, suing alone, to set aside a deed executed by their common ancestor. Allred v. Smith, 47 S. E. 597, 599, 135 N. C. 443, 65 L. R. A. 924 (quoting Bigelow, Estop. 347; Black, Judgm. 549).

Drawing a prize, see Drawing.

"Premiums" and "prizes" are equivalent words within the meaning of the federal statute forbidding the carriage from one state to another of any paper, etc., purporting to be or to represent a chance in a lottery. U. S. v. Jefferson, 134 Fed. 299, 300.

The word "prize" has been defined by Webster as: "That which is obtained against the competition of others; anything carried off as the result or award of a contest; the thing striven for; and hence anything offered to be competed for, or as the inducement to or reward of effort; that which is won in a lottery." One definition given by the Century Dictionary is "that which is won in a lottery, or in any similar way." Among the definitions of the word given in the Standard Dictionary are "anything to be striven for; also anything offered as an inducement to participate in a scheme of chance." As used in connection with anti-lottery laws, the word "prize" comprehends anything of value gained (or, correspondingly, lost) by the operation of chance, or any inequality in amount or value in a scheme of payment of money or other thing of value as a result of the use of chance. The gain need not be large to constitute a prize. If there are a number of purchasers of tickets, bonds, certificates, or whatever the thing sold may be called, who enter on equal terms, but in payment by the company or manager the scheme includes the making of an inequality in amounts by the employment of chance, so that one gets more than another similarly situated, it is a lottery. The inequality may not be great, nor in favor of the person selected by chance. It may be against him. He need not lose all or gain all. Partial gain (or loss in the hope of gain) is sufficient to constitute a prize. A scheme wherein inequality in payment or distribution is to result from chance has been held to be a lottery. But in this case the court held that a scheme of a loan and security company which issued what was called "investment certificates" was not unlawful. Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Waring, 44 S. E. 320, 326, 117 Ga. 599, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177.

PRIZE (In Admiralty)

Movables taken from the enemy on land are generally called "booty," and on the high seas "prize." The high seas include coast waters without the boundaries of low-water mark, though within bays or roadsteads; waters on which a court of admiralty has jurisdiction. United States v. Dewey, 23 Sup. Ct. 415, 422, 188 U. S. 254, 47 L. Ed. 463 (citing United States v. Ross, 27 Fed. Cas. 899, 1 Gall. 624).

PRIZE LOGS

Under the provisions of section 1504, Rev. Codes, all prize logs must be divided between the owners in proportion to the number of logs owned by each, and "prize logs" are defined to mean such logs as bear no mark or marks and all logs bearing marks, not recorded or claimed within one year af-er any general drive. Norman v. Rose Lake Lumber Co., 128 Pac. 85, 88, 22 Idaho, 711, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 678.

PRO

See Decree Pro Confesso.

PRO RATA—PRORATE

"Pro rata" means, literally, "according to the rate," or, as ordinarily understood, "in proportion." Where a contract of reinsurance provided that the loss, if any, should be payable "pro rata," at the same time and in the same manner as by said companies, means according to that proportion which the amount of the reinsurance bears to the original insurance; and, where the amount of original insurance is $10,000 and the reinsurance is $5,000, the insurer is liable for one-half of the loss, and, where the original insurance is subsequently reduced to $2,000, the insurer does not thereby become liable for the whole amount of any loss. Home Ins. Co. v. Continental Ins. Co., 73 N. E. 65, 66, 180 N. Y. 389, 105 Am. St. Rep. 772.

PRO TEMPORE

See Judge Pro Tempore; Officer Pro Tem.

The words "pro tempore" mean for the time being. Dobbs v. State, 115 Pac. 370, 372, 5 Okl. Cr. 475.

PROBABILITY

See Reasonable Probability.

"Probability" is an element which addresses itself to the reason, and is frequently invoked in matters of human conduct and experience for determining the existence or nonexistence of a fact. In civil cases a jury is authorized to determine an issue of fact as its probability or improbability may appear to them from the evidence before them. Hence, any evidence tending to show either of these conditions is relevant to the issue to be determined by them. "If the evidence offered conduces in any reasonable degree to establish the probability or improbability of the fact in controversy, it should go to the jury." Moody v. Peirano, 88 Pac. 380, 383, 4 Cal. App. 411 (quoting Home Ins. Co. v. Welde, 11 Wall. [78 U. S.] 438, 20 L. Ed. 197).

"Probability" is defined to be the state of being probable. To say that a state of facts have a probable existence ex vi termini implies that there is reason for the belief that they exist. If there is no reason for such belief, there is no probability of their existence. In order to find that there is a probability of the existence of a fact, a reason for believing in the existence of such fact must be entertained. A requested instruction that, if from the evidence there was a "reasonable probability" of defendant's innocence, then there was a just foundation for a reasonable doubt and would authorize an acquittal, is not erroneous, because of the use of the word "reasonable" as qualifying the word "probability." The employment of the word "reasonable" does not and cannot affect the correctness of the charge. It is but a statement of what would have been implied from the word probability had it been used alone. Mims v. State, 37 South. 354, 141 Ala. 93.

A "probability of innocence," is the equivalent of a reasonable doubt, and requires the acquittal of a defendant charged with crime. Gainey v. State, 37 South. 355, 141 Ala. 72.

PROBABLE

The word "probable" is defined as "having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt; likely;" and in common acceptance the word implies, when applied to a condition which may be supposed beforehand, that we know facts enough about the condition supposed to make us reasonably confident of it, or, at the least, that the evidence preponderates in its favor. Gallamore v. City of Olympia, 75 Pac. 978, 980, 34 Wash. 379 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

The word "probable" does not mean free from doubt, but carries with it the idea that the contingency is more likely to happen than otherwise. It is said to be synonymous with the word "likely." Webster's definition is: "Having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt; likely." Willard Oil Co. v. Riley, 115 Pac. 1103, 1105, 29 Okl. 19.

"Probable" means capable of being proved; having more evidence for than against. Accused's explanation of the possession of stolen property may or may not be reasonable, probable, satisfactory, or true, yet, if in the minds of the jury it creates a reasonable doubt of his guilt, he is entitled to an acquittal, and the burden is thrown on the prosecution to establish the falsity of it beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Trosper, 109 Pac. 858, 859, 41 Mont. 442.

The term "probable" has been defined to mean "having more evidence for than against," supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt. Ex parte Heacock, 97 Pac. 77, 8 Cal. App. 420.

In prosecutions for homicide, in charging as to the presumption that persons intend the ordinary results of their acts, the words "necessary," "probable," "usual," and "ordinary" are substantially synonymous. Beauregard v. State, 131 N. W. 347, 351, 146 Wis. 280.

Liabile synonymous

See Liabile.

As likely

The word "probably," as used in an instruction as to future suffering, has the same if not a stronger meaning than the word "likely," and on the authority of Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 84 S. W. 133, 103 Mo. App. 665, it is held that an instruction permitting the jury to allow plaintiff a reasonable compensation for bodily pain and distress of mind which she had suffered or would "probably" in the future suffer, in direct consequence of her injuries, was not fatally erroneous in the use of the word "probably." Pentoney v. St. Louis Transit Co., 84 S. W. 140, 141, 108 Mo. App. 681.

PROBABLE CAUSE

See Certificate of Probable Cause; Reasonable or Probable Cause; Want of Probable Cause.

See, also, Proximate Cause.

An affidavit for a warrant of arrest, stating that affiant has "good reason to believe" that an offense has been committed, rather than, as required by the Code, that he has "probable cause for believing," is void. "Good reason to believe" is not the equivalent of "probable cause for believing," as required by the statute. City of Bessemer v. Eldge, 50 South. 270, 271, 273, 162 Ala. 201.

An affidavit averring that affiant has probable cause for believing and does believe that a designated offense has been committed, and charging accused with the offense, is defective for failing to affirm probable cause for believing that accused is guilty, as required by the Code. City of Selma v. Shivers, 43 South. 565, 566, 150 Ala. 502.

For appeal

The phrase, "probable cause for appeal," used in Rev. St. 1887, § 8048, does not mean there is no probable reason to suppose the judgment shall be reversed, but that appellant has assigned grounds on which he expects to rely which are open to doubt or honest difference of opinion. In re Nell, 87 Pac. 881, 12 Idaho, 749 (citing In re Adams, 22 Pac. 547, 81 Cal. 163; People v. Valencia, 45 Cal. 305; Ex parte Hoge, 48 Cal. 6).

For arrest

The expression "probable cause," as used in the federal Constitution, referring to the issuance of warrants, means that there is a probability that a crime has been committed by the person named in the warrant. Ex parte Heacock, 97 Pac. 77, 8 Cal. App. 420.

"Probable cause" for arrest, as a defense to an action for false imprisonment, means a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances. Sanders v. Davis, 44 South. 979, 983, 153 Ala. 375.

Under Const. U. S. Amend. 4, providing that no warrant shall issue but on probable cause supported by oath or affirmation, a federal court has no jurisdiction to direct the issuance of a warrant on an information made on the information and belief of the United States district attorney alone; but it must be supported by proof establishing probable cause, to wit, legal evidence that a crime has been committed and that there is probable cause and belief that the accused is guilty of the commission thereof. Rev. St. § 1022, provides that certain offenses may be prosecuted either by indictment or information filed by the district attorney, and Const. Amend. 4, declares that no warrant shall be issued but on probable cause supported by oath or affirmation. Held, that the constitutional provision does not require that the oaths or affirmations of the supporting witnesses be taken in open court or before the judge issuing the warrant or directing its issuance, but that the information is so supported where it is accompanied by the evidence of witnesses sworn before a United States commissioner on a preliminary examination, properly taken and certified, or when accompanied by the affidavits made on oath of witness sworn before any officer authorized by law to take and subscribe such oaths or affirmations. United States v. Baumert, 179 Fed. 735, 738.

For removal of accused to another district

"Probable cause" to believe a person has committed a crime is the existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite the belief in a reasonable mind, acting on facts within the knowledge of the prosecutor, that the person charged was guilty of the crime for which he was prosecuted. "Probable cause" to believe a defendant has committed a crime, such as will warrant his removal to another district to be tried therefor, is not established by evidence which is as consistent with his innocence as with his guilt, although it may afford ground for a suspicion or conjecture that the offense was committed. United States v. Green, 136 Fed. 618, 628 (citing Wheeler v. Nesbitt et al., 24 How. [65 U. S.] 544, 16 L. Ed. 765; Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. [58 Mass.] 217; Carl v. Ayers, 53 N. Y. 14; McGurn v. Brackett, 33 Me. 331; Wanser v. Wyckoff, 9 Hun [N. Y.] 178; Anderson v. How, 22 N. E. 695, 116 N. Y. 336; Lacy v. Mitchell, 23 Ind. 67; Hays v. Blizzard, 30 Ind. 457; Driggs v. Burton, 44 Vt. 124; Mitchell v. Wall, 111 Mass. 492; Harpham v. Whitney, 77 Ill. 32).

In civil proceedings

"Probable cause" for the issuance of an attachment is not synonymous either with "just cause" or "legal cause." Sehon, Blake & Stevenson v. Whitt (Ky.) 92 S. W. 280, 281.

In relation to prizes and seizures

"Differences of opinion existed for a time as to the legal meaning of the term 'probable cause' [for the seizure of goods under the revenue laws], but it is settled that it imports circumstances which warrant suspicion, and that a doubt respecting the true construction of the law is as reasonable a cause of seizure as a doubt respecting the fact." Averill v. Smith, 17 Wall. [84 U. S.] 82, 92, 21 L. Ed. 113.

"Reasonable cause" sufficient to justify seizure under the revenue laws means "probable cause;" it imports a seizure under circumstances which warrant suspicion. United States v. One Sorrel Horse, 22 Vt. 655, 657, 7 Fed. Cas. 315, 316.

In order to constitute "probable cause" in a case of seizure, it is not necessary that the circumstances should be such as to make a prima facie case for condemnation. The words "probable cause" in all cases of seizure have a fixed and well-known meaning and import a seizure made under circumstances that warrant suspicion, and the same rule applies in cases of prize, and captors are not liable for damages in a case where a vessel captured presents probable cause for the capture, even though she was led into the predicament in which she was found by mistakes of the revenue officers of the captors' own government. The La Manche, 3 Spr. 207, 25 Law Rep. 585, 14 Fed. Cas. 965, 968.

"Probable cause" is held to be "a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the party is guilty of the offense with which he is charged." "Probable cause" means less than evidence which would justify condemnation; it imports a seizure made under circumstances which warrant suspicion. In an action against an internal revenue officer for a wrongful seizure of property which has been returned to the claimant intact, proof of probable cause for such seizure is a complete defense, and may be made, although the court, in rendering judgment for the claimant in a proceeding for the forfeiture of the property, failed to make the certificate of probable cause provided for by Rev. St. § 970; and where the proof shows that defendant made the seizure by direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, based upon information received from his special agents which justified a suspicion that the plaintiff was violating the law, the court is warranted in charging the jury as matter of law that there was probable cause. Agnew v. Haymes, 141 Fed. 331, 640, 72 C. C. A. 325 (quoting and adopting definition in Munns v. De Nemours, 3 Wash. C. C. 37, 17 Fed. Cas. 993).

On judgment for claimant of property seized by officers of the customs service for forfeiture, on the ground that it was fraudulently imported, a certificate of reasonable cause should be entered by the court as provided by Rev. Stat. § 970, although the verdict of the jury was clearly right, under the evidence, where it is affirmatively shown that the officers who instituted the proceedings acted in good faith and on reasonable ground of suspicion. The term "reasonable cause" does not differ in meaning from the term "probable cause" found in section 909, Rev. Stat. As stated in Averill v. Smith, 17 Wall. (84 U. S.) 82, 21 L. Ed. 613: "Proof of 'probable cause,' if shown by the certificate of the District Court which rendered the decree discharging the property, is a good defense to an action of trespass brought by the claimant against the collector who made the executive seizure, provided it appears that judicial proceedings were instituted, and that the charge against the property was prosecuted to a final judicial determination. Where the respondent prevails in such an information, the court, says Mr. Parsons, gives to the prosecuting or seizing officers a certificate of 'probable cause,' if in their judgment he had such cause for the seizure, and that, he says, protects the officer who made the seizure from prosecution for making the same; and he adds that the final decree of the court in a case of forfeiture regularly before the court is conclusive. * * * Probable cause, he says, means less than evidence which would justify a condemnation, and the same author says, if the court before whom the cause is tried shall cause a certificate of entry to be made that there appeared to be a reasonable cause of seizure, the seizing officer shall be protected from all costs, suits, and actions on account of the seizure and prosecution. Differences of opinion existed for a time as to the legal meaning of the term 'probable cause,' but it is settled that it imports circumstances which warrant suspicion, and that a doubt respecting the true construction of the law is as reasonable cause of seizure as a doubt respecting the fact." United States v. 83 Sacks of Wool and 5,974 Sheepskins, 147 Fed. 747, 748, 749 (citing Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 246, 4 L. Ed. 381; Locke v. U. S., 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 339, 3 L. Ed. 364; Munns v. De Nemours, 3 Wash. C. C. 31, 17 Fed. Cas. 993).

As proximate cause

See Proximate Cause.

Sufficient cause synonymous

Under Pen. Code, § 872, providing that if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe defendant guilty, the magistrate must issue the commitment, evidence that accused on June 16, 1906, stated, in the affidavit to secure registration as a voter, that he was born in England, and on January 31, 1908, stated, in a similar affidavit, that he was born in San Francisco, was sufficient to justify an order of commitment; the term "sufficient cause," as used in the statute, being equivalent to the term "probable cause," as used in the habeas corpus act. Pen. Code, § 1487. People v. Coombs, 98 Pac. 686, 687, 9 Cal. App. 262.

PROBABLE CAUSE (In Malicious Prosecution)

"Probable cause" for a prosecution is a "reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense." Shafer v. Loucks (N. Y.) 58 Barb. 426, 431 (quoting definition in Foshay v. Ferguson [N. Y.] 2 Denio, 619); Cook v. Proskey, 138 Fed. 273, 276, 70 O. C. A. 563 (quoting and adopting definition in Sanders v. Palmer, 55 Fed. 217, 5 O. C. A. 77); Gates v. Union Sawmill Co., 47 South. 761, 762, 122 La. 437 (quoting and adopting definitions in 26 Cyc. p. 24; Lane v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 76 Atl. 1016, 1017, 78 N. J. Law, 672); Butcher v. Hoffman, 73 S. W. 266, 268, 99 Mo. App. 239; Moneyweight Scale Co. v. McCormick, 72 Atl. 537, 540, 109 Md. 170; Lasky v. Smith, 80 Atl. 1010, 1011, 115 Md. 370, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 742; Carp v. Queen Ins. Co., 101 S. W. 78, 97, 203 Mo. 295; Wilkerson v. McGhee, 134 S. W. 595, 596, 153 Mo. App. 343; Price v. Denison, 103 N. W. 728, 729, 95 Minn. 106; Stoecker v. Nathanson, 98 N. W. 1061, 1063, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 435, 70 L. R. A. 667.

"Probable cause," unlike malice, is not determined by the standard of the particular defendant, but of the ordinarily prudent and cautious man, exercising conscience, impartiality, and reason, without prejudice, upon the facts; and an honest belief, unfounded upon reasonable grounds, is not sufficient. Rawson v. Leggett, 90 N. Y. Supp. 5, 7, 97 App. Div. 416 (citing Heyne v. Blair, 62 N. Y. 19).

"Probable cause" has been variously defined as "reasonable cause, such as would operate on the mind of a discreet man; probable cause, such as would operate on the mind of a reasonable man." There must be such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe and entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person is guilty. McMorris v. Howell, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1018, 1019, 89 App. Div. 272.

"Probable cause" is the knowledge of facts, actual or apparent, strong enough to justify a reasonable man in the belief that he has lawful grounds for prosecuting the defendant in the manner complained of. Burt v. Smith, 73 N. E. 495, 496, 181 N. Y. 1, 2 Ann. Cas. 576.

"Probable cause" is a reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a reasonably prudent man in his belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense with which he is charged. Deering v. Gebhard, 108 N. Y. Supp. 715, 716, 57 Misc. Rep. 451.

Knowledge of facts, actual or apparent, strong enough to justify a reasonable man in the belief that he has lawful ground for a prosecution, is "probable cause," which will defeat an action for malicious prosecution. Orefice v. Savarese, 118 N. Y. Supp. 175, 177, 61 Misc. Rep. 88.

"The question of what constitutes 'probable cause' in instituting a criminal prosecution does not depend upon whether the offense has been committed in fact, nor whether the accused is guilty or innocent, but upon prosecutor's belief based upon reasonable grounds. The prosecutor may act upon appearances, and, if the apparent facts are such that a discreet and prudent person would be led to believe that accused had committed the crime, he would not be liable in a prosecution for malicious prosecution although it may turn out that the accused was innocent." A finding of want of "probable cause" in instituting a prosecution against plaintiff for larceny of money collected by him for defendant's company of B. is not warranted, the facts being that on investigation it was found that plaintiff had received the money of B. and given him a receipt therefor, and examination of the books and inquiry of the company's employes not disclosing that it had been paid over to the company, or showing any trace of it after its receipt by plaintiff, and plaintiff having previously and in like manner misappropriated money belonging to the company. Bankell v. Weinacht, 91 N. Y. Supp. 107, 109, 99 App. Div. 316 (citing Fagan v. Knox, 66 N. Y. 525; Anderson v. Howe, 22 N. E. 695, 116 N. Y. 336; Kutner v. Fargo, 54 N. Y. Supp. 332, 34 App. Div. 317; Scott v. Dennett Surpassing Coffee Co., 64 N. Y. Supp. 1016, 51 App. Div. 321).

"Probable cause" consists of such reasons as are sufficient to create a reasonable belief that a crime has been committed, and that the party charged was connected therewith. It is such a state of facts in the mind of the prosecutor as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe or entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person accused is guilty. Florida East Coast R. Co. v. Groves, 46 South. 294, 296, 55 Fla. 436 (quoting and adopting definition in Cockfield v. Braveboy [S. C.] 2 McM. 270, 39 Am. Dec. 123; Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. [58 Mass.] 217; Faris v. Starke, 3 B. Mon. [42 Ky.] 4; citing Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] p. 323).

"Probable cause" for a criminal prosecution is in effect the concurrence of the belief of guilt with the existence of facts and circumstances reasonably warranting the belief. Rump v. Williams, 122 Pac. 1082, 1085, 162 Cal. 444.

"Probable cause" for the commencement of a civil action consists in such facts and circumstances as will warrant a cautious, reasonable, and prudent man in the honest belief that his action and means taken in its prosecution are just, legal, and proper. Nelson v. International Harvester Co. of America, 135 N. W. 808, 810, 117 Minn. 298.

"Probable cause" means a belief by the prosecutor in the guilt of the accused based upon facts and circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to induce such belief in the mind of a reasonable and cautious man. Ruth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 71 S. W. 1055, 1058, 98 Mo. App. 1.

"Probable cause" for a criminal prosecution is such a state of facts known to the prosecutor, or such information received by him from sources entitled to credit, as would induce a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe, and does induce the prosecutor to believe, that accused is guilty of the crime charged, and thereby cause the prosecution. A well-founded doubt as to the law may constitute probable cause which will justify a prosecution the same as doubt concerning the facts, if such doubt induces in the mind an honest belief that there are legal grounds for the prosecution. Whipple v. Gorsuch, 101 S. W. 735, 737, 82 Ark. 252, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1133, 12 Ann. Cas. 38.

"Probable cause" is any such combination of facts and proofs as may fairly lead the reasonable mind to the belief that, in the absence of hitherto unknown qualifying or rebutting evidence, the prosecution ought to be successful. Bosch v. Miller, 118 S. W. 506, 509, 136 Mo. App. 482.

The following instruction was not erroneous for any reason assigned: "'Probable cause' is defined to be the existence of such facts and circumstances as would excite the belief in a reasonable mind, acting on the facts within the knowledge of the prosecutor, that the person charged was guilty of the crime for which she was prosecuted." Stewart v. Mulligan, 75 S. E. 991, 992, 11 Ga. App. 660.

"Probable cause" for a prosecution alleged to have been malicious is based on circumstances that would induce action upon the part of an ordinarily prudent person; the test being applied as of the time when the prosecution began. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States v. Lester (Tex.) 110 S. W. 499, 501.

"Probable cause," as employed in actions for malicious prosecution, is such a state of facts in the mind of the prosecutor as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe or entertain an honest and strong suspicion that the person arrested is guilty. Hanchey v. Brunson, 56 South. 971, 972, 175 Ala. 236.

"Probable cause," justifying the institution of a criminal prosecution so as to constitute a defense in an action for malicious prosecution, embodies the element that defendant at the time of instituting the criminal prosecution believed plaintiff guilty. Fleischhauer v. Fabens, 96 Pac. 17, 19, 8 Cal. App. 30.

"Probable cause" for a prosecution is a suspicion founded upon circumstances warranting a reasonable man to believe that the charge is true. Carpenter v. Ashley, 115 Pac. 268, 269, 15 Cal. App. 461.

"Probable cause" for the institution of a prosecution claimed to have been malicious is the existence of circumstances and facts sufficiently strong to excite in a reasonable mind suspicion that the person charged with having been guilty was guilty. It is a case of apparent guilt as contradistinguished from real guilt. It is not essential that there should be positive evidence at the time the action is commenced, but the guilt should be so apparent at that time that it would be sufficient ground to induce a rational and prudent man, having due regard for the rights of others, as well as his own rights, to institute a prosecution. The facts and circumstances should be such as to justify a reasonable belief in the guilt of the person accused. Moore v. First Nat. Bank of Statesville, 52 S. E. 944, 947, 140 N. C. 293 (citing Cabiness v. Martin, 14 N. C. 454; Smith v. Deaver, 49 N. C. 513; Stacey v. Emery, 97 U. S. 642, 24 L. Ed. 1035; Ferguson v. Arnou, 37 N. E. 626, 142 N. Y. 580; Spengler v. Davy, 56 Va. [15 Grat.] 381; Munns v. Dupont, 17 Fed. Cas. 993; Jagg. Torts, 616).

In an action for malicious prosecution, probable cause is that which leads the average man to believe that the accused, charged with embezzlement, purposely withheld the truth, and which warrants him to believe in the guilt of the accused in the offense charged. Kirk v. Wiener-Loeb Laundry Co., 45 South. 738, 739, 120 La. 820.

It is not essential to probable cause for an arrest that the accuser believe that he has sufficient evidence to procure a conviction. Belief that "probable cause" exists for an arrest is different from belief of guilt, and the former has no materiality in malicious prosecution unless as bearing on the question of malice. Michael v. Matson, 105 Pac. 537, 539, 81 Kan. 360.

"Probable cause" is a suspicion founded upon circumstances warranting a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true; and, in an action for malicious prosecution under Penal Code, § 481, making it a crime to alter a railroad ticket with intent to defraud, evidence that a ticket had been altered, with intent to use it a second time between the same points, that it was purchased from plaintiff, and, on a comparison of plaintiff's handwriting with the writing on the ticket which constituted the claimed alteration, both the railroad employes and a reputable expert, acting in good faith, were convinced that the writing on the ticket was plaintiff's showed probable cause for the prosecution, though plaintiff denied having seen the ticket. A person instituting a prosecution need not investigate the crime itself, or seek to ascertain whether there are any other facts relating to the offense, or whether the accused had any defense to the charge, or exhaust all sources of information bearing upon the facts which have come to his knowledge, but it is sufficient, to justify him in seeking to have the act punished, if the facts within his knowledge, although not in law constituting a crime, are such as to induce in the mind of a reasonable man the honest belief that a crime has been committed. That, after the taking of evidence upon the preliminary examination of one accused of crime, the magistrate adjudged that he was guilty of the offense, and committed him to answer thereto in the superior court, is prima facie evidence of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 107 Pac. 611, 613, 157 Cal. 333.

Under Civ. Code 1910, §§ 4440, 4452, providing that want of probable cause shall exist when the circumstances are such as to satisfy a reasonable man that the accuser had no ground for proceeding but his desire to injure the accused, it was not accurate to charge, in an action for illegal arrest and malicious prosecution that to constitute probable cause there must be reasonable grounds of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a "cautious" man in the belief that the person arrested is guilty of a crime. McPherson v. Chandler, 72 S. E. 948, 949, 137 Ga. 129.

Want of probable cause, the burden of proving which is on plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution, the determination of any disputed facts as to which is for the jury, and the sufficiency of the facts shown as to which is for the court, and which is absence of a suspicion founded on circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true, does not exist where a draft given a hotel by a guest is thrown out by the bank on which it is drawn, with the indorsement, "Has no account," and the hotel has him arrested, without further communication with the bank, and without consulting the district attorney; and this, though it knows the guest has correctly given it the name of another hotel to which he has gone, and which is further away from the bank. Booraem v. Potter Hotel Co., 97 Pac. 65, 66, 154 Cal. 99.

Actual guilt or innocence

Probable cause, in an action for malicious prosecution, does not depend on the actual state of the case in point of fact, for there may be probable cause for commencing a criminal prosecution against a party, although subsequent developments may show his absolute innocence. Mundal v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 99 N. W. 278, 274, 92 Minn. 26.

"Probable cause" for the institution of a prosecution alleged to have been malicious is not to be confounded with actual guilt. As actual guilt must always be established by proof beyond a reasonable doubt, while "probable cause is only such a state of facts and circumstances as would lead a careful and conscientious man to believe that the plaintiff was guilty." Martin v. Corscadden, 86 Pac. 33, 36, 34 Mont. 308 (adopting definition in Barron v. Mason, 31 Vt. 189).

Apparent state of facts

"Probable cause" for the institution of a criminal prosecution, so as to defeat an action for malicious prosecution therefor, exists where the facts found on reasonable inquiry are such as will induce a reasonably intelligent and prudent person to believe that accused had committed the crime charged. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Henry, 97 N. E. 313, 317, 178 Ind. 239.

Conjecture or suspicion

"Probable cause" is a reasonable ground for suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the person accused is guilty of the offense charged, but mere suspicion and belief, though honestly entertained, do not afford a basis for probable cause, but it is essential that the actor knows of facts or circumstances justifying a reasonable and cautious man in believing that accused is guilty. Gulsby v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 52 South. 392, 394, 167 Ala. 122.

Conviction or acquittal

The existence of want of probable cause is not to be determined by the subsequent acquittal or discharge of accused, but by the existence or nonexistence at the time of reasonable grounds of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the person accused was guilty of the offense charged. Goodman v. Bedras, 123 N. Y. Supp. 250, 252.

Where a criminal prosecution is commenced on the initiative of a private person and a conviction and judgment is had without collateral fraud, the judgment will stand as probable cause for such prosecution, though it is reversed on appeal for error in the trial, even error in holding that the facts do not constitute guilt of the criminal charge. The fraud that will take a judgment of conviction out of the rule rendering it probable cause is fraud extrinsic, not in respect to matters litigated and passed upon at the trial. Topolewski v. Plankinton Packing Co., 126 N. W. 554, 558, 148 Wis. 52.

Unless shown to have been procured by fraud or undue influence, a judgment of conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive evidence of the existence of probable cause, though subsequently reversed and set aside. The finding of an indictment is prima facie, but not conclusive, evidence of probable cause, but an acquittal is not evidence of the want of it. Casey v. Dorr, 127 S. W. 708, 709, 94 Ark. 433, 140 Am. St. Rep. 124, 21 Ann. Cas. 1046.

"Probable cause" for instituting criminal proceedings which will protect the person instituting them from liability for malicious prosecution is constituted by such facts and circumstances as when communicated to the generality of men of ordinary and impartial minds are sufficient to raise in them a belief, or real grave suspicion of the guilt of the person, and there was probable cause, where a verdict and judgment of conviction were had in a court of competent jurisdiction, though the party was afterwards acquitted upon an appeal to a superior tribunal. Griffis v. Sellars, 19 N. C. 492, 496, 31 Am. Dec. 422.

If the facts reasonably justify defendant in the honest belief that plaintiff had committed an offense, defendant cannot be said to have made complaint without "probable cause," notwithstanding the fact that the papers when drawn did not accurately state the offense. An acquittal does not necessarily show want of "probable cause." Davis v. McMillan, 105 N. W. 862, 863, 864, 142 Mich. 391, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 928, 113 Am. St. Rep. 585, 7 Ann. Cas. 854.

When a committing magistrate examines a criminal complaint and discharges accused, his action establishes a prima facie case of want of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution, but such is not the effect of a verdict and judgment of acquittal by a court having jurisdiction to try and determine the guilt or innocence of accused, so that, where accused was tried and acquitted by a justice of the peace having final jurisdiction, the justice's docket in an action for malicious prosecution was admissible only to show that the prosecution had terminated, and was not relevant to the question of probable cause. Downing v. Stone, 68 S. E. 9, 11, 152 N. C. 525, 136 Am. St. Rep. 841, 21 Ann. Cas. 753.

Good faith or malice

Malice distinguished, see Malice.

"Probable cause" has reference to the common standard of human judgment and conduct, and malice refers to the mind and judgment of the defendant in the particular act charged as a malicious prosecution. Griswold v. Griswold, 77 Pac. 672, 673, 143 Cal. 617.

Honest belief

"Probable cause" in an action for malicious prosecution does not depend on the actual state of the case in point of fact, but upon the honesty and reasonable belief of the party commencing the prosecution. The want of probable cause is essential for every suit for malicious prosecution. Richardson v. Dybedahl, 98 N. W. 164, 165, 17 S. D. 629.

"Probable cause" does not depend on the actual state of the case in point of fact, but upon the honest and reasonable belief of the party commencing the prosecution; and, where, defendant knew that his former wife and plaintiff had married in Missouri the next day after such wife's divorce from defendant in Kansas, and knew that by the law of the latter state a divorce did not become effective until six months after its rendition, and that under that law a marriage within six months was bigamy, and also knew that plaintiff, though himself unmarried, was subject to prosecution in this state under Rev. St. 1909, § 4724, for knowingly marrying the wife of another, defendant had probable cause for a prosecution under section 4724. Smith v. Glynn (Mo.) 144 S. W. 149, 151.

Prosecution to enforce civil liability

Where a creditor brings a criminal prosecution against his debtor for the purpose of collecting the debt, it is prima facie evidence of want of probable cause, shifting the burden of showing probable cause and want of malice on defendant. MacDonald v. Schroeder, 63 Atl. 1024, 1025, 1026, 214 Pa. 411, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701, 6 Ann. Cas. 506 (citing Prough v. Entriiken, 11 Pa. 81; Schofield v. Ferrers, 47 Pa. 194, 86 Am. Dec. 532; Schmidt v. Weidman, 63 Pa. 173. To the same effect is Appeal of Work, 59 Pa. 444; Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. 283; Filman v. Ryon, 32 Atl. 89, 168 Pa. 484).

Reliance on information of others

"Probable cause," depending not on the actual state of the case, but on honest and reasonable belief, being necessarily the product, in part, of hearsay declarations, the prosecuting attorney, being called on in an action for malicious prosecution to justify his course, may give the sources of his information, and relate in detail not only the facts of his personal knowledge, but those communicated by others. Carpenter v. Sibley, 119 Pac. 391, 396, 15 Cal. App. 589.

"Probable cause" means reasonable grounds for suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant an ordinarily cautious man in the belief that accused is guilty of the offense charged; and, to constitute probable cause, a prosecutor need not necessarily have personal knowledge of the transaction of which he complains, but may act upon information communicated to him in the ordinary routine of business, where he honestly believes such information to be true and the information is of such character, and is communicated in such a manner that, under similar circumstances it would be acted upon by a business man of ordinary prudence. The question of probable cause does not turn upon a consideration of what were the facts of the case, but upon a consideration of what were the facts as they appeared to or were known by, or were believed to be, by the person making complaint; the controlling fact being not whether there was actual cause for the prosecution, but whether the person instituting it had probable cause for doing so. Thus where a person's goods had been stolen, and two of such person's regularly employed watchmen reported to him that they had seen another steal the goods, and that he admitted to them that he had done so, the owner was warranted in believing that the other man was guilty, and, in the absence of evidence tending to show negligence or bad faith in the employment of the watchman, or that the owner knew or had reason to suspect the information to be false, constituted probable cause for suing out a warrant to search the suspected person's dwelling house. Where the facts are undisputed, and but one inference can be drawn from them, the question of probable cause for suing out a complaint is one of law for the court, and it is error to submit any phase of the question to the jury. Lane v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 76 Atl. 1016, 1017, 78 N. J. Law, 672.

"The finding of an indictment by a grand jury, or the commitment of an examining magistrate, is prima facie evidence of 'probable cause.'" On parity of reason, the filing of an information by a prosecuting attorney on his own information and belief is prima facie evidence of probable cause, but not so when the information is predicated on the affidavit of the complaining witness. Pinson v. Campbell, 101 S. W. 621, 624, 124 Mo. App. 260 (citing Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] p. 328; Sharpe v. Johnston, 76 Mo. 660).

Reasonable cause

In an action for malicious prosecution, the use in the charge of the term "reasonable cause" for "probable cause" was not error, the terms being practically synonymous, though it is better to use the latter term. McCall v. Alexander, 65 S. E. 1021, 1022, 84 S. C. 187.

A finding, in an action for malicious prosecution based on defendant procuring the arrest of plaintiff on the ground that there was danger that he would leave the state to avoid examination of proceedings in aid of execution, that defendant had reasonable cause to believe there was danger that plaintiff was about to leave the state to avoid examination, is the same thing as "probable cause" to procure his arrest on that ground. Bank of Miller v. Richmon, 94 N. W. 998, 999, 68 Neb. 781.

PROBABLE CONSEQUENCE

A "probable consequence" is one that is more likely to follow its supposed cause than it is to fail to follow it. The Santa Rita, 173

Fed. 418, 417 (quoting and adopting definition in Cole v. German Savings & Loan Soc., 124 Fed. 115, 59 C. C. A. 595, 63 L. R. A. 416).

PROBABLE EXPECTANCY

The right which every man has to earn his living or pursue his trade without interference, or to seek employment without hindrance, has been called a "probable expectancy." L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Bricklayers' Benevolent & Protective Union No. 3, 85 N. E. 897, 900, 200 Mass. 110, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1236 (citing and adopting definition in Jersey City Printing Co. v. Cassidy, 53 Atl. 230, 63 N. J. Eq. 759).

PROBATE

See Matter of Probate.

"Probate" means proof of the will by the proper tribunal. Decker v. Fahrenholtz, 68 Atl. 1048, 1050, 72 Atl. 339, 107 Md. 515 (quoting and adopting definition in Warford v. Colvin, 14 Md. 532).

"Probate of a will" is defined to be: "The proof before an officer authorized by law that an instrument offered to be proved or recorded is the last will and testament of the deceased person whose testamentary act it is alleged to be." In other words, probate is proving the instrument purporting to be a will to have been signed by the testator in the presence of at least two witnesses, who at his request signed the same as witnesses, and that the testator at the time of the execution thereof was of sound mind." Shevaller v. State, 123 N. W. 424, 426, 85 Neb. 366, 19 Ann. Cas. 361 (quoting and adopting definition in Pettit v. Black, 12 N. W. 841, 844, 13 Neb. 142, 151; citing 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 378); Walker v. Ehresman, 113 N. W. 218, 219, 79 Neb. 775 (citing Pettit v. Black, 12 N. W. 841, 13 Neb. 151).

The "probate of a will" is the proof before the proper court or officer that the instrument offered to be proved or recorded is the last will and testament of the deceased person whose testamentary act it is alleged to be. This includes not only the evidence jurisdictional and otherwise, presented to the court, but also the judicial determination by the court on that evidence that the instrument is what it purports to be. Tilghman v. France, 59 Atl. 277, 278, 99 Md. 611.

The word "probate," as used in a statute providing that all original wills together with a probate thereof shall remain in the office of the clerk of the probate court of the proper county, means the legal proof of the due execution and validity of the will. Schofield v. Thomas, 83 N. E. 121, 124, 231 Ill. 114.

The probate of the will in the probate court is the "probate of the will," and an appeal by the widow from the decree of probate court allowing the will, against her objection, is a legal proceeding, wherein the validity of the will is drawn in question, within Pub. St. c. 127, § 18, authorizing the widow, within six months after "probate of the will," to waive provisions therein for her, and claim as in case of intestacy, and providing that when, after probate of the will, legal proceedings are instituted, drawing in question the validity or effect of the will, the probate court may, within the six months, on petition, extend the time for filing the claim and waiver till expiration of six months from termination of such proceedings, so that, not having obtained such permission, she cannot make such filing after the affirmance on appeal, more than six months after the decree of the probate court. Bunker v. Murray, 65 N. E. 420, 421, 182 Mass. 335.

"In England the 'probate of wills' of personal estate belongs to the ecclesiastical courts. No probate of a will relating to real estate is there necessary. The real estate, upon the death of the party seised, passes immediately to the devisee under the will, if there be one, or, if there be no will, to the heir at law. The person who thus becomes entitled takes possession. If one person claims to be the owner under a will, and another denies the validity of the will and claims to be the owner as heir at law, an action of ejectment is brought against the party who may be in possession by the adverse claimant; and on the trial of such an action the validity of the will is contested, and evidence may be given by the respective parties as to the capacity of the testator to make a will, or as to any fraud practiced upon him, or as to the actual execution of it, or as to any other circumstance affecting its character as a valid devise of the real estate in dispute. The decision upon the validity of the will in such action becomes res judicata, and is binding and conclusive upon the parties to that action and upon any person who may subsequently acquire the title from either of those parties; but the decision has no effect upon other parties and does not settle what may be called the status or character of the will, leaving it subject to be enforced as a valid will, or defeated as invalid, whenever other parties may have a contest depending upon it. A probate of a will of personal property, on the contrary, is a judicial determination of the character of the will itself. It does not necessarily or ordinarily arise from any controversy between adverse claimants, but is necessary in order to authorize a disposition of the personal estate in pursuance of its provisions. In case of any controversy between adverse claimants of the personal estate, the probate is given in evidence, and is binding upon the parties, who are not at liberty to introduce any other evidence as to the validity of the will." Medill v. Snyder, 81 Pac. 216, 217, 71 Kan. 590 (quoting State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233, 265, 81 Am. Dec. 118).

"The 'probate' of a will merely determines the validity of its execution." Hence a will may not be denied probate because some of its provisions are invalid or contrary to provisions of law. In re Pforr, 77 Pac. 825, 826, 144 Cal. 121.

Administration and guardianship

The term "probate," when strictly used, relates to proving a will before the officer or tribunal having jurisdiction to determine its validity, but in common usage the word is often used as applying to any of the incidents of administration. Dibble v. Winter, 93 N. E. 145, 152, 247 Ill. 243 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5627, 5628).

While the word "probate" in a technical sense means the official proof of an instrument offered as a last will and testament, the term "probate matters," as used in Const. art. 6, § 20, providing that probate courts, when established, shall have original jurisdiction of all probate matters, means the settlement of estates, including the granting of letters testamentary or of administration, the collection of assets, allowance of claims, payment of debts, and the sale of real estate, if necessary for that purpose, and the distribution of the property to those entitled thereto by the laws of descent or by the will, but does not include the administration of testamentary trusts. In re Mortenson's Estate, 94 N. E. 120, 121, 248 Ill. 520, 21 Ann. Cas. 251. See, also, Frackelton v. Masters, 94 N. E. 124, 249 Ill. 30.

The admission of a will to "probate" is in effect, the appointing as executor of the person named therein as such. "The proof of the authority of the executor to act as such is a production of a copy of the will by which he was appointed, certified under the seal of the ordinary. This is usually called the 'probate.'" In re Miller's Estate, 65 Atl. 681, 682, 216 Pa. 247 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.); Miller v. Henderson, 61 Atl. 913, 914, 212 Pa. 263 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

PROBATE COURT

See Pertaining to Probate Court.

The "probate court" is a court of superior jurisdiction, and within its jurisdictional limits its judgments import absolute verity, the same as other superior courts. Collins v. Paepcke-Leicht Lumber Co., 84 S. W. 1044, 1046, 74 Ark. 81 (citing Borden v. State, 11 Ark. 519, 44 Am. Dec. 217; Currie v. Franklin, 11 S. W. 477, 51 Ark. 338; Montgomery v. Johnson, 81 Ark. 74; Apel v. Kelsey, 12 S. W. 703, 52 Ark. 341, 20 Am. St. Rep. 183; Alexander v. Hardin, 16 S. W. 264, 54 Ark. 480).

The "probate court" is an administrative rather than a judicial court. It cannot bind a court of full equity powers by a decision that a given course of conduct is not inequitable and cannot compel the equity court to enforce its decree, however inequitable the conduct of the party obtaining it. Clark v. Chase, 64 Atl. 493, 495, 101 Me. 270.

In order to effect the legislative will, the statute authorizing "probate courts" to entertain applications for the purchase of school lands will be held to confer jurisdiction upon the persons who exercise the jurisdiction of the probate courts and not upon the courts themselves as "probate courts." In re Johnson, 12 Kan. 102, 105.

"Probate duties" are taxes graded in accordance with the valuation of the estate to be probated. State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 106 N. W. 93, 96, 97 Minn. 11, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732.

PROBATE HOMESTEAD

Under Rev. St. 1887, §§ 5440, 5441, a probate homestead is one to be created by probate court out of the real property belonging to the decedent which was subject to a homestead at the time of the death of the decedent, where its value was less than $5,000, and it was such property as might have been occupied as a home at the time of decedent's death. In re McVay's Estate, 93 Pac. 28, 34, 14 Idaho, 56.

PROBATE PROCEEDING

See Ordinary Probate Proceedings.

Matters pertaining to probate are called "probate procedure," as distinguished from what is denominated "civil" or "criminal procedure"; but, when the court sitting in a probate procedure discovers in a petition the statement of facts forming the basis of controversies, those issues may be tried in that forum in a proper manner as in the case of any other civil action, and the judgment in a probate case is conclusive on a matter therein involved and considered, in a subsequent action. Meeker v. Winyer, 92 Pac. 883, 884, 48 Wash. 27.

PROCEDENDO

At common law "procedendo" was a writ by which an appellate court handed back jurisdiction to the trial court. Donnell v. Wright, 97 S. W. 928, 931, 199 Mo. 304.

A "procedendo" is a writ from a higher to a lower court, directing that the case be proceeded with. It does not undertake to say what the decision shall be, but merely that there shall be one, and where there is a reversal the case is thereupon taken up in the court below at the point where the erroneous judgment was rendered. Exchange Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Warsaw-Wilkinson Co., 185 Fed. 487, 488, 107 C. C. A. 587.

PROCEDURE

See Court Procedure; Criminal Procedure.

See, also, Practice (In Law).

The term "procedure" is so broad in its signification that it is seldom employed as a term of art; it includes in its meaning whatever is embraced by the three technical terms, "pleading," "evidence," and "practice." State ex rel. Sims v. Caruthers, 98 Pac. 474, 479, 1 Okl. Cr. 428 (quoting and adopting the definition of Bish. Cr. Proc.); Kirksville v. Munyon, 91 S. W. 57, 58, 114 Mo. App. 567 (citing City of Kansas v. O'Connor, 36 Mo. App. 594).

Proceedings to secure a change of venue are within the words "commencement, pleading, practice and procedure," in a statute providing that civil actions and proceedings in municipal courts shall be commenced and conducted as prescribed by the statute regulating the commencement, pleading, practice, and procedure in district courts, but more especially are within the words "practice and procedure." Clark v. Baxter, 108 N. W. 833, 839, 98 Minn. 256.

Rev. St. 1908, § 3226, provides that every person desiring to change the point of diversion of water from any of the streams of the state shall present a petition to the district court from which the original decree issued, and that the "practice and procedure" on all petitions shall be the same as if the petition were for an original statutory decree, etc. Section 3300 provides for the payment by counties of the costs of reference, in a general adjudication of the priorities of rights to the use of water for irrigation, out of the treasury of the county in which the water district lies. Held, that the terms "practice" and "procedure," as used in section 3226, related to the legal rules directing the manner of bringing parties into court.

and the method of the court after they are brought in, in hearing, dealing with, and disposing of matters in dispute between them, and had no reference to costs, so that such sections did not authorize imposition of costs on a county of proceedings by petitioner to change the point of his diversion, which involved a mere private dispute, in which the county was not interested. Downs v. Reno (Colo.) 124 Pac. 582, 583 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5486).

In an act regulating the ascertainment of compensation for property condemned for public use, providing that the practice prescribed by the act shall supersede existing practice in condemnation cases except in cases of the taking of land for public improvement where a payment of award and damages is authorized to be set off against benefits, the word "practice" was used as synonymous with "procedure," and hence includes the tribunal as well as the conduct of matters before it. Morris v. City of Newark, 32 Atl. 1005, 1006, 78 N. J. Law, 268.

PROCEED

The word "proceed," used by the trial judge in response to objections, may mean go on, stop objecting, or that the objection is frivolous, or that he does not choose to consider it then, if at all. Such rulings, if rulings they be, are vague in legal intent, and are shorn of all precision. Morrison v. Turnbaugh, 91 S. W. 152, 155, 192 Mo. 427.

PROCEED TO ENFORCE

The words "proceed to enforce," in a statute providing that creditors may proceed to enforce a judgment at any time within 10 years after the entry thereof, mean to take steps to make it effectual by legal process. Issuing execution on a money judgment is such a step. "To proceed to enforce" and "to enforce" are materially different things. Davidson v. Gaston, 16 Minn. 230, 240 (Gil. 202, 212).

Municipalities Lien Law (P. L. 1892, p. 369), as amended by P. L. 1909, p. 260, provides that when serving notice of lien, claimant shall file with an official of the municipality a bond for payment of interest to the contractor in the event of claimant's failure to proceed according to the statute, and provides that nothing shall affect the validity of claims or liens due under contracts made prior to the act, but that all the proceedings shall be subject to the provisions of the amending statute so far as applicable. No bond was required by the former act. Held, that the phrase "proceedings to enforce" does not include the filing of the claim itself, so that a claim due under a contract made prior to the act must be accompanied by the bond required by the amending act; "proceeding to enforce" referring to such proceedings had after the claim is duly perfected. Howell Lumber Co. v. New Brunswick (N. J.) 75 Atl. 750, 751.

PROCEED TO TRIAL

The phrase "proceed to trial," in Rev. Codes 1899, § 6650, authorizing the postponement of a trial on application for a continuance showing that accused cannot safely "proceed to trial," is not inconsistent with a postponement after a trial has commenced on satisfactory showing of necessity therefor on account of matters arising or coming to the applicant's knowledge since the trial commenced. Lyman-Ellel Drug Co. v. Cooke, 94 N. W. 1041, 1043, 12 N. D. 88.

The word "proceedings," in its general acceptance, means the form in which actions are to be brought and defended, the manner of intervening in suits, of conducting them, the mode of deciding them, of opposing judgments and of executing judgment. In its more general sense, it means all steps or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action. The word "proceedings," in Municipalities Lien Law (P. L. 1892, p. 369), as amended by P. L. 1909, p. 260, providing that, when serving notice of lien, claimant shall file with an official of the municipality a bond conditioned for the payment of interest to the contractor on the event of claimant's failure to proceed according to statute, and providing that nothing in law shall affect the validity of claims or liens under contract made prior to the act, but all proceedings to enforce such lien shall be subject to the provision of the amended statute, does not include the filing of the claim itself, so that a claim due under a contract made prior to the act must be accompanied by the bond required by the amending act, but refers to such proceedings had after the claim is duly perfected. Howell Lumber Co.

v. New Brunswick (N. J.) 75 Atl. 750, 751 (quoting and adopting definition in Erwin v. United States, 37 Fed. 470, 2 L. R. A. 229; Morewood v. Hollister, 6 N. Y. 309).

"Proceedings," both in common parlance and in legal acceptance, imply action, procedure, prosecution. * * * If it is a progressive course, it must be advancing; and cannot be satisfied by remaining at rest." Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. [34 U. S.] 329, 368, 9 L. Ed. 145.

Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565, as amended by Laws 1898, c. 520) § 61, provides that in constructing a street or new portion thereof across a steam surface railroad, notice shall be given by the municipality to the railroad company, and, if the municipality shall determine that such street is necessary, it shall apply to the Board of Railroad Commissioners before any further proceedings are taken to determine whether such street shall pass over or under such railroad, or at grade. Held, that the words "before any further proceedings are taken" mean proceedings to physically make, grade, and open the streets, and not proceedings to acquire title, and therefore, where hearing on due notice was had on the question of necessity, the city could proceed to acquire title to the land required for the street, without first applying to the Railroad Commissioners. In re West 134th St. in City of New York, 128 N. Y. S. 589, 593, 143 App. Div. 258.

Under Code 1907, § 3792, authorizing a third person to interpose a claim to the property in detinue, and thereupon the same proceedings must be had as in other trials of the right of property, and section 6039, authorizing a person claiming to own the legal or equitable title to, or a paramount lien on, property levied on under execution or attachment, to contest his right to the property, a landlord, claiming a landlord's lien on crops grown on premises, may not interpose his claim in an action in detinue brought by the holder of the legal title conveyed by the tenant's mortgage on the crops, as the word "proceedings" signifies form, manner, or mode, and tokens a means, an instrument. Johnson v. New Enterprise Co., 50 South. 911, 912, 163 Ala. 463 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5632 et seq.).

Under Acts 1901, p. 30, c. 26, § 3, providing that the publication by a newspaper of a fair account of judicial proceedings, unless prohibited by the court, etc., or of any other official proceedings authorized by law in the administration of the law, shall be deemed privileged, and not libelous, unless actual malice is proved, "proceedings" relates to the form and manner of the exercise of the power conferred by law. A. H. Belo & Co. v. Lacy (Tex.) 111 S. W. 215, 217.

All matters and steps

"Proceedings" is defined to mean all the steps or measures adopted in the prosecution or defense of an action. State ex rel. West v. McCafferty, 105 Pac. 992, 996, 25 Okl. 2. See, also, State ex rel. Nissler v. Donlan, 80 Pac. 244, 247, 32 Mont. 258.

In its most comprehensive sense, the term "proceeding" includes every step taken in a civil action except the pleadings. Loeb v. Loeb, 103 Pac. 570, 572, 24 Okl. 384 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5632).

"The word 'proceeding' applies to any step to be taken in a cause which is authorized by law in order to enforce the rights of the parties or effectuate the proper conduct of it while pending in court." State ex rel. Bruce v. District Court, 83 Pac. 641, 642, 33 Mont. 359.

In Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 29 Pac. 335, 94 Cal. 42, it said: "The settlement of a bill of exceptions is a 'proceeding' in an action. Lukes v. Logan, 4 Pac. 883, 66 Cal. 33; Irwin v. Bank of Bellefontaine, 6 Ohio St. 86; Wilson v. Allen (N. Y.) 3 How. Prac. 371; Rich v. Husson (N. Y.) 1 Duer, 620; Wilson v. Macklin, 7 Neb. 52; Strong v. Hardenburgh (N. Y.) 25 How. Prac. 438. In Irwin v. Bank of Bellefontaine, 6 Ohio St. 86, it is said: "The word 'proceeding' is generally applicable to any step taken by a suitor to obtain the interposition or action of a court." In Wilson v. Allen (N. Y.) 3 How. Prac. 371, the court said: "The term 'proceeding' is generally applicable to any step taken by a party in the progress of a civil action. Anything done from the commencement to the termination is a proceeding." Sherman v. Southern Pac. Co., 102 Pac. 257, 258, 31 Nev. 285.

The word "proceedings," in the recital of the case-made that it contains all the proceedings, includes the evidence. John Deere Plow Co. v. Jones (Kan.) 75 Pac. 1039, 1040; Id., 76 Pac. 750, 68 Kan. 650.

Act of city

In Laws 1903, p. 248, c. 122, § 200, the Legislature used the expression "proceedings of any kind commenced and now pending and not completed on behalf of any city" with reference to the subjects then under consideration, and did not refer to judicial proceedings, but to the organization, powers, and duties of cities of the first class, and particularly of issuing bonds and the erection of public improvements, and it was to protect such proceedings commenced under previously existing law that the saving clause was enacted. State v. City of Topeka, 74 Pac. 647, 650, 68 Kan. 177.

Act of officer

Proceedings legislative in nature, such as the fixing of passenger rates by the Virginia Corporation Commission, are not "proceedings in a court," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 720, forbidding federal courts from enjoining proceedings in state courts. Pren-tis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 69, 211 U. S. 210, 53 L. Ed. 150.

A proceeding before the Mississippi Railroad Commission does not become a "proceeding in a state court," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 720, so as to prevent a federal court from enjoining the enforcement of an order of such commission which is claimed to violate the federal Constitution, because the Commission would have to resort to a state court to aid it in the enforcement of its order. Mississippi Railroad Commission v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 90, 93, 203 U. S. 335, 51 L. Ed. 209.

Same—Reprieve

A reprieve by the Governor of a state, postponing, until a fixed date, the execution of a death sentence, evidently granted to permit the prisoner to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order of a district court denying habeas corpus, is not a "proceeding against the prisoner," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 768, 27 Stat. 751, c. 226, nullifying any proceeding against a person in prison or confined or restrained of his liberty, in any state court, or by authority of any state, pending the proceedings or appeal in habeas corpus cases in the federal courts. Rogers v. Peck, 28 Sup. Ct. 87, 90, 199 U. S. 425, 50 L. Ed. 256.

Action and suit synonymous

A "proceeding" is not an "action" as used in the Code of Civil Procedure, and no such thing as "a proceeding" is known thereto. Hence a demurrer on the ground of another "proceeding" pending between the same parties, for the same cause, raises no question of law. Queens County Water Co. v. O'Brien, 115 N. Y. S. 495, 499, 131 App. Div. 91 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

The term "action," as defined by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3471, 3479, means a proceeding instituted in a court by one or more parties against another or others to enforce or protect a right, to redress or prevent a wrong, or to punish a public offense; and by section 3472 all proceedings to enforce a remedy, not falling technically under the foregoing definition of the term "action," are classed under the head of "special proceedings." The term "proceeding," as ordinarily used, is generic in meaning and broad enough to include all methods of invoking the action of courts, whether controversies properly termed "actions" or "special proceedings," as distinguished from them. But, in view of the distinction made by the Code between actions and special proceedings, the term "proceeding," when used in connection with the phrase "action, motion, or proceeding," must be construed, not in this general generic sense, nor as synonymous with the term "action," but as referring to the other proceedings provided for in the Code, to wit, special proceedings; otherwise the term "action" could not be assigned any meaning, nor could the term "motion," as used in the expression "action, motion, or proceeding." State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court of Lewis and Clarke County, 82 Pac. 789, 790, 33 Mont. 138, 8 Ann. Cas. 752.

Appeal

Laws 1909, c. 549, establishing the civil court of Milwaukee county and regulating the procedure therein and appeals therefrom, as amended by Laws 1911, c. 425, provides, by section 14, subd. 1, that all proceedings therein and on appeal therefrom, shall be governed by St. 1898, c. 160, relating to proceedings in courts of justices of the peace; and by subd. 2 that, in actions and proceedings specified in St. 1898, §§ 3572, 3573, in such court and involving over $200, the practice, trials, judgments, and "proceedings thereafter" shall be governed by the law relating to circuit courts. Section 28, subd. 1, as amended, provides that an appeal may be taken to the circuit court of Milwaukee county from any final judgment of such civil court, or from certain orders; and subdivision 5 provides that proceedings on appeal shall be governed by the provisions relating to appeals from justice's court. Held, that the "proceedings thereafter," under section 14, subd. 2, referred to proceedings for the enforcement of the judgment; but that section 14, subd. 1, referring to proceedings on appeal, adverse to the judgment, left appeals to the circuit court governed by the statutory provisions relating to appeals from justices' courts, and required notice of appeal to be served on the civil judge, and that service on the clerk was not sufficient. Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 136 N. W. 157, 158, 150 Wis. 336.

Appropriation of waters

Rev. St. 1908, § 3308, providing for the publication of a copy of the order allowing an appeal from a judgment in a "proceeding" under section 3280, applies, not only to a proceeding to change the point of diversion of water, but also to a proceeding for original adjudication of a water right. Napier v. Glenwood Light & Water Co., 112 Pac. 323, 49 Colo. 208.

Assessment proceeding

The several statutory steps required for the improvement of a street by pavement or sewer constitute a "proceeding," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 79, providing that when ever a statute is amended such amendment shall not affect pending proceedings. City of Toledo v. Marlow, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 298, 299.

Lists of real estate returned delinquent by collectors of cities and towns, for nonpayment of municipal taxes, as authorized and provided by section 36 or chapter 47 of the Code of 1899, or a like provision in a charter specially granted to a city or town, must be certified to the clerk of the county court of the county wherein the real estate is, and by that officer recorded, as the lists returned by the sheriff of the county for nonpayment of state taxes are recorded, and thereby made part of the "proceedings of record" in said office. Hogan v. Piggott, 56 S. E. 189, 193, 60 W. Va. 541.

Assignment for benefit of creditors

It has been held that the word "proceedings," as used in subdivision "b" of section 70 of National Bankrupt Act of 1898, was not employed with reference to specific litigation or actions in some particular matter pending the insolvency administration, but refers to the commencement of proceedings to establish the fact of insolvency in the state court. The making of an assignment for the benefit of creditors is such a proceeding. Osborn v. Fender, 92 N. W. 1114, 1115, 88 Minn. 309.

Criminal proceeding

A witness testifying before the grand jury relative to violations of section 145a, Code Supp. 1910, is entitled to the immunity afforded by subsection 9, whether the grand jury's investigation results in an indictment, presentment, or information, or not; such inquiry by the grand jury constituting a "proceeding." Flanary v. Commonwealth, 75 S. E. 289, 292, 293, 113 Va. 775.

The words "hearing" and "proceeding," as used in Acts 1897, p. 137, c. 14, § 6, providing that a person offending against sections 1 and 2, which define various offenses which are made felonies by section 7, is a competent witness against another person so offending, and may be compelled to testify upon any trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation in the same manner as any other person, are terms that pertain to proceedings of a criminal nature and mark different steps in a criminal prosecution. Thus "proceeding" relates to proceedings before a grand jury when the state is proceeding by indictment or presentment; the word "hearing" may relate to the trial of the cause upon final hearing of a preliminary hearing before the committing magistrate; but in all cases the state contemplates the same sort of criminal proceeding against a person offending, and an offender can be compelled to testify only in some criminal trial, hearing, proceeding, or investigation of some offense under sections 1 and 2 of the act, and cannot be compelled to testify or be punished for contempt for failure to testify in a civil proceeding growing out of a fraudulent election. Lindsay v. Allen, 82 S. W. 648, 649, 113 Tenn. 517.

Default

The taking and entering of a default is a "proceeding taken against" the party in default, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from proceedings taken against him on application therefor within a specified time. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. King Land & Improvement Co., 120 Pac. 1066, 1067, 162 Cal. 44.

Equitable action

Actions by grantors of real property, about 5 years after the youngest of them came of age, to have the deed set aside, are not "proceedings to recover real property or the possession thereof," within Code Civ. Proc. § 865, and fall within the 10-year limitation of section 338. O'Donohue v. Smith, 109 N. Y. Supp. 929, 930, 57 Misc. Rep. 448.

Execution

The statute prohibiting sales in bulk contains a proviso that no proceedings at law or in equity shall be brought against the purchaser to invalidate any such voidable sale after 90 days from the consummation thereof. Held, that a levy on property so wrongfully sold made under an execution within 90 days after the sale constituted a "proceeding" at law to invalidate the sale within such act. Dickinson v. Harbison, 72 Atl. 941, 942, 78 N. J. Law, 97.

Family allowance

An application for a family allowance for infant beneficiaries of an estate is a "proceeding" and a "case" within Code Civ. Proc. § 372, providing that a guardian ad litem may be appointed in any case where it is deemed by the court in which the action or proceeding is prosecuted, or by a judge thereof, expedient to represent the infant in the action or proceeding. In re Snowball's Estate, 104 Pac. 446, 447, 156 Cal. 235.

Filing affidavit

The filing of an affidavit is a "proceeding." Wimberly v. State, 119 S. W. 668, 670, 90 Ark. 514.

Garnishment

While a garnishment is ancillary to the main action, it is a "proceeding" within Balinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6500, relating to appeals to the Supreme Court. Tatum v. Geist, 82 Pac. 902, 40 Wash. 575.

Grand jury inquiry

The phrase, "any suit or proceeding," in the federal Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1087), in force January 1, 1912, declaring in section 299 that the repeal of laws shall not affect "any suit or proceeding," including those pending on writ of error, appeal, certificate, or writ of certiorari, includes an inquiry pending before a grand jury properly impaneled in the District Court, and an indictment returned by the grand jury after January 1st is valid. The word "proceeding," though frequently used in a restrictive sense, must be understood in its ordinary signification. United States v. New Departure Mfg. Co., 195 Fed. 778, 779.

The word "proceeding" is not a technical one and is aptly used by the courts to designate an inquiry before a grand jury. The examination of witnesses before a grand ary concerning an alleged violation of the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890 (28 Stat. 209, § 647), is a "proceeding," within the meaning of the proviso to the act of February 15, 1903 (32 Stat. 854-904, c. 755), that no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence in any "proceeding," suit, or prosecution under certain named statutes, of which the anti-trust act is one. Hale v. Henkel, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 375, 201 U. S. 43, 50 L. Ed. 652.

An inquisition before a grand jury to determine the existence of supposed violations of the anti-trust act was a "proceeding," within Act Cong. Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 32 Stat. 848, providing that no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence in any "proceeding," under several statutes mentioned, including such anti-trust act. The word "proceeding" is a broad term, and was apparently intended to include some form of judicial inquiry other than a "suit or prosecution." In one sense it is true a criminal proceeding is not instituted against an accused person until a formal charge is made against him by indictment or information, or a complaint before a magistrate; and proceedings before a grand jury are not, in that sense, a criminal proceeding against an accused. Post v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 611, 161 U. S. 583, 40 L. Ed. 816. But in another sense any initial step before a judicial tribunal preliminary to the commencement of a civil suit or a criminal prosecution is a proceeding. As used in this statute, inasmuch as testimony given in a suit or prosecution embraces that given, not only at the trial, but upon all occasions incident to the controversy, the term "proceeding," if limited to some step in the progress of a civil suit or a criminal prosecution which has been previously instituted, is mere tautology. A rational construction seems to require it to include any preliminary step which is incident to the institution of a civil suit or a criminal prosecution. In re Hale, 139 Fed. 496, 503.

The words "prosecution" or "proceeding," in the connection in which used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2041, making every person who shall deter a witness from giving evidence in a cause guilty of a misdemeanor, provided that if the cause be a "prosecution" or "proceeding" against any one for a felony, the punishment, shall be imprisonment in the penitentiary or in the county jail, or by fine, and mean a prosecution by indictment or information or on an affidavit on which accused has been charged before an examining magistrate, and by no fair intendment can either of them be held to mean a mere inquiry by the grand jury as to the commission of an offense. State ex rel. Butler v. Foster, 86 S. W. 245, 251, 187 Mo. 590.

Inspection

Pub. St. 1901, c. 148, § 12, provides that all records and papers of a corporation shall be open to inspection of stockholders, and such portions thereof as have any relation to an unpaid demand of a creditor or to the collection of any demand shall be open to the inspection of the creditor and his attorney. Held that, where a creditor of a corporation was entitled, as an absolute right, to an inspection of certain records of the corporation, a proceeding to compel such inspection was a "proceeding at law," and not in the nature of a bill for discovery. Hub Const. Co. v. New England Breeders' Club, 67 Atl. 574, 575, 74 N. H. 282.

Judgment

In so far as a judgment for plaintiff is defective and fails to finally adjudicate his rights, it is a "proceeding" taken against him, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, giving the court power to relieve a party from a proceeding taken against him through his mistake, etc., and a plaintiff may invoke the aid of the section as well as a defendant. Lemon v. Hubbard, 102 Pac. 554, 556, 10 Cal. App. 471.

Ministerial act

The word "proceedings," as used in the rule that the writ of prohibition arrests "proceedings" when they are without or in excess of jurisdiction, cannot reasonably be said to apply or have reference to the doing of a purely ministerial act. Stein v. Morrison, 75 Pac. 246, 256, 9 Idaho, 426.

Objection

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, provides that the court may relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him because of his mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect, where the application for relief is made within a reasonable time, and in no case exceeding six months. Held that, where defendant's bill of exceptions was not served in time through excusable neglect, and the bill came up for settlement within a few days after the expiration of six months from the time defendant should have served her proposed bill, and after six months from the day it was actually served, at which time plaintiffs objected to the settlement of the bill because it had not been served in time, the mere reservation of plaintiffs' objection at the time of service did not constitute "a proceeding," within the statute; and that defendants were entitled to apply for relief at the time the objection based on their default was presented to the court in the proceeding for settlement or within a reasonable time thereafter. Pollitz v. Wickersham, 88 Pac. 911, 913, 150 Cal. 288.

Order

Rev. St. 1895, art. 332, declares that any person interested in the estate of a decedent may have the proceedings of the county court reviewed at any time within two years and not afterwards, provided that persons non compos, etc., shall have two years after the removal of the disability. Held that, where orders of a county judge vesting the entire control of the community property and the right of sale in the surviving husband were invalid, such orders constituted "proceedings of the county court," which the district court was authorized to review by certiorari. Williams v. Steele, 108 S. W. 155, 157, 101 Tex. 382.

Pleadings

A prayer to take a case from the jury which makes no reference to the pleadings presents only the question whether the facts that might properly be found from the evidence constitute a good cause of action, and, if the prayer refers to the "proceedings," it does not by that term include "pleadings," as the "proceedings" consist of successive acts done and steps taken as parts of the suit during its progress, while the "pleadings" consist of statements of the litigants, in legal form, of facts constituting a cause of action and grounds of defense. Monumental Brewing Co. v. Larrimore, 72 Atl. 596, 599, 109 Md. 682 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5410, 5632, 5633).

Preliminary examination

A preliminary examination pending in the court of criminal correction is a "proceeding," within the statute providing that such court in proceedings before it, is empowered to establish rules in relation to continuances. State v. Epstein, 84 S. W. 1123, 1125, 186 Mo. 144.

The procuring of testimony of one believed by the county attorney to have knowledge of violations of the gambling laws by causing such person to appear before a justice of the peace, under Gen. St. 1909, § 2732, providing that, if the county attorney shall be notified by any person or shall have knowledge of any violations of the laws relating to gambling, he shall forthwith inquire into the facts of such violation and be authorized to cause subpoenas to be issued to such persons as he shall have reason to believe have information of such violations, is a "proceeding" within section 2640, making it perjury willfully and corruptly to swear falsely to any material matter to an oath legally administered in any "proceeding before any court, tribunal or public body or officer." State v. Smith, 114 Pac. 1074, 1076, 84 Kan. 646.

Process

The word "process" has a general and a restrictive meaning. In its restrictive sense it applies to judicial writs issued in an action. In its general meaning it is synonymous with "proceeding," and embraces the entire proceedings in an action from beginning to end. The publication of a proclamation calling an election, being a part of a legislative proceeding rather than a judicial proceeding or action, does not constitute "process." Stearns v. State ex rel. Biggers, 100 Pac. 909, 914, 23 Okl. 462.

Scire facias

Rev. St. 1899, § 3748, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 320, provides that any action or proceeding which the plaintiff in a judgment might have thereon may be maintained in the name of an assignee. Held that, though scire facias to revive a judgment is not an "action," it is a "proceeding," and may therefore be maintained in the name of an assignee. Reyburn v. Handlan, 147 S. W. 846, 847, 165 Mo. App. 412.

Settlement of statement or bill of exceptions

The preparation and settlement of a statement or a bill of exceptions is a "proceeding" within Rev. Codes, § 4229, authorizing an amendment of any pleading or proceeding in the furtherance of justice. Richardson v. Bohnet, 109 Pac. 727, 729, 18 Idaho, 328.

The judge's certificate to the engrossed bill of exceptions "was an adjudication by the judge that all the matters ordered incorporated in the bill had been set forth therein, and that the bill so certified constituted the bill of exceptions as ordered settled by him." It constituted a "proceeding" taken against appellant, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 403, allowing amendments to proceedings on the ground of mistake, etc., within six months. Merced Bank v. Price, 93 Pac. 866, 867, 152 Cal. 697.

Taking deposition

As used in Rev. St. § 720 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 581), providing that an injunction shall not be granted by any federal court to stay "proceedings" in any court of the state, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy, the term "proceedings" includes the taking of depositions in an action in the state court, so that a federal court, having obtained no jurisdiction of the action, could not enjoin the taking of such depositions. American Shipbuilding Co. v. Whitney, 190 Fed. 109, 110.

Taxation of costs

Taxation of costs in an action is a "proceeding," within Rev. Codes, § 6589, giving the court authority to allow amendments, and the court must permit an amendment to the original memorandum of costs, and thus supply the necessary facts on which to determine the amount of costs. Neary v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 110 Pac. 226, 237, 41 Mont. 480.

The word "proceedings," as used in the bastardy act providing that the trial and "proceedings" of a prosecution both before the justice and in the district court shall in all respects not otherwise provided for be governed by the law regulating civil actions, may be construed as indicating all steps taken in the action, including the taxation of costs, and, although there is no provision in the act authorizing the taxing of costs to the defendant, yet the character of the action is such as to authorize such costs to be taxed under the statute relating to the allowance of costs in actions, civil or criminal. Poole v. French, 80 Pac. 997, 998, 71 Kan. 391.

Verification of claim

Where the venue of an affidavit of a claim for injuries on a defective sidewalk required by Oswego City Charter (Laws 1895, p. 733, c. 394, § 345), was laid in the city and county of Oswego, but the affidavit was taken before a notary, whose signature and seal stated that he was an official of New York county, and the affidavit was in fact taken in New York county, the court had no authority to permit the venue to be amended; it not being a "proceeding in an action," within Code Civ. Proc. § 723, providing for amendments. Kleyle v. City of Oswego, 95 N. Y. Supp. 879, 881, 109 App. Div. 330.

PROCEEDING ACCORDING TO LAW

See According to Law.

PROCEEDING AUTHORIZED BY LAW

There is no practical difference in the meaning of "public official proceedings" and "proceedings authorized by law" as applied to privileged communications, and an investigation by a Senate committee of charges against one, appointed to office by the President and whose appointment has been sent to the Senate for confirmation, falls within the meaning of the latter term as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2239. Tuohy v. Halsell, 128 Pac. 126, 127, 35 Okl. 61, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323.

PROCEEDING FOR SETTLEMENT OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS

The phrase "when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions," in a court rule, requiring the appellant in a civil action to file, within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, a transcript of the record, provided that, when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions which may be used in support of such appeal, the time for filing and serving the transcript shall not begin to run until the settled bill of exceptions has been filed, includes any proceeding looking to the settlement of a bill of exceptions actually inaugurated and pending undisposed of and not abandoned, regardless of questions whether the bill can be legally settled. Dernham v. Bagley, 90 Pac. 543, 544, 151 Cal. 216.

PROCEEDING OF COUNTY BOARD

Canvass

The proceedings of the county board of supervisors in canvassing the votes at general elections, and declaring the names of successful candidates for county offices, as required by Code, §§ 1149-1156, are proceedings of the board as a board of supervisors within section 441, requiring the publication of proceedings of the board of supervisors. *Index Printing Co. v. PROCEEDS

See Clear Proceeds; Gross Proceeds; Net Proceeds; Receipt of Proceeds.

Net proceeds as earnings, see Earnings.

The word "proceeds" is defined as "the amount proceeding or accruing from some possession or transaction." It is also defined as "yield, issue, product." State ex rel. Ledwith v. Brian, 120 N. W. 916, 917, 84 Neb. 30.

"Proceeds" is synonymous with product, income, yield, receipts, returns, and means all that was received from an execution sale. Dittemore v. Cable Milling Co., 101 Pac. 593, 594, 16 Idaho, 298, 133 Am. St. Rep. 98.

The word "proceeds," as used in an attorney's contract with another employed to solicit retainers by which the attorney contracted to pay the solicitor one-half of the proceeds realized by the attorney on account of the claims prosecuted, meant that the attorney would divide evenly with the solicitor whatever amount he received on account of such claims, whether costs or bonuses or percentages paid by clients on the amounts recovered for them respectively. In re Clark, 95 N. Y. Supp. 388, 396, 108 App. Div. 150.

Property received in exchange for property granted for the use of schools, and likewise rents of the property so received, is "proceeds," within Const. 1870, art. 8, § 2, providing that property granted for school purposes and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the object for which such grant was made; and therefore such property and the rents are not subject to taxation. People ex rel. Hanberg v. City of Chicago, 75 N. E. 239, 240, 216 Ill. 537.

The word "proceeds" is a word of loose and varying significance, employed with different meanings. Where testator devised certain property to a trustee to maintain and educate his niece and nephew until the latter should attain majority, when the "proceeds" of the property remaining unexpended were to be equally divided between them, they to share equally therein during their natural lives, but that, if either died without issue, the whole net proceeds should be paid to the survivor, and that, if either died with issue, then one-half of the net proceeds should be expended to maintain and educate such issue until both niece and nephew had died, when the proceeds should become the absolute property of the issue then surviving, the court refused to say that it was not the actual intent of the testator that the rents were to be paid over as proceeds, as had been in fact done. Kidwell v. Ketler, 79 Pac. 514, 517, 146 Cal. 12.

The word "proceeds," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1644, providing that the preference given in section 1643 to a mortgage against a decedent's estate extends only to the "proceeds" of the property mortgaged, and that, if such proceeds are insufficient to pay the mortgage, the part remaining unsatisfied must be classed with other demands against the estate, does not include the rents of the property mortgaged accruing before sale, where the rents, issues, or profits of the property were not included in the mortgage. In re McDougald's Estate, 79 Pac. 875, 877, 146 Cal. 196.

Testator gave his residuary estate to trustees to support a son at a cost of not exceeding $3,000 a year, and to pay a daughter for life $1,000 annually, and he directed that the income from the remainder should, during the life of a brother, be divided into four parts, one part of which should be paid to the brother for life and the other parts to enumerated beneficiaries, and that at the death of the brother the income given him should be paid to his eldest daughter until the death of the son and daughter of testator, and at the death of the survivor of them the executors should sell all the real estate then unsold and divide the proceeds equally into six parts, to be disposed of in a manner prescribed. Held, that testator did not dispose of the remainder of his estate except the proceeds of real estate unsold at the time of the death of his brother and son and daughter, and the words "proceeds of real estate then unsold" cannot be construed to mean real estate sold by the executors before that time on the theory of equitable conversion, and hence there was a partial intestacy. Woodruff v. White, 79 Atl. 304, 306, 78 N. J. Eq. 410.

As gross proceeds

The word "proceeds," in a contract by which defendant in consideration of a sum advanced, agreed to go to the gold diggings of California and give plaintiff one-half of the proceeds of labor there for one year, means the amount, income, or products of the labor, and no deductions are to be made from such proceeds by reason of expenses paid for sickness during the year. Staples v. Wheeler, 88 Me. 372, 374.

Where a contract provides that a certain payment is to be made "out of the proceeds" of a certain crop of oats, held, that such payment must be made out of the entire proceeds of the sale, and is not limited to the net proceeds thereof. Salisbury v. Spofford, 126 Pac. 400, 401, 22 Idaho, 393.

As conveying estate

Where a trust to pay the income of an estate quarterly to testator's widow and daughter was to cease upon the widow's death, whereupon the corpus of the trust estate was to become the property of the daughter, and, if testator's wife died before he did, the entire estate was to go to the daughter, and, in case of her death before testator, testator's wife was to receive the whole income from the trust estate during her life, the trust to cease upon her death and the corpus thereof to become the property of testator's son, and the will provided that the provision for testator's wife, if accepted, should be in lieu of dower, and that, if she should elect to receive dower instead of such provision, the entire net proceeds from the remaining trust estate should be paid to the daughter, and the wife elected to take her dower, the daughter was entitled merely to the proceeds of the trust estate during the life of the wife, as the estate cannot be embraced in the gift of the "proceeds" where the proceeds are derived from the estate. In re Kings County Trust Co., 127 N. Y. Supp. 879, 881, 69 Misc. Rep. 531 (citing 6 Words and Phrases).

As money or other thing realized from sale

Where a will creating a testamentary trust provided that, upon the sale by the executors of personal or mixed property, the trust should apply only to the "proceeds," and that the purchasers should not be required to see to the application of the "purchase money," and the next paragraph required the executors to distribute the proceeds at once as soon as any realty was sold by them, a sale by the trustees on credit was unauthorized, in view of the meaning of the term "proceeds," which, when used in connection with a sale, means a sum of money derived from a sale of property. Wisdom v.

Wilson (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1128, 1137 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5640).

The words "proceeds," as used in Const. art. 8, § 3, relating to the permanent school fund, and declaring that the proceeds of all lands that have been or may hereafter be granted to the state shall be a perpetual fund for common school purposes, implies a sale and conversion of the lands into money; and the statement in the section that the proceeds shall be a perpetual fund places it beyond question that the true meaning of the provision is that such lands might be sold and the proceeds invested. McMurtry v. Engelhardt, 98 N. W. 40, 41, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 271.

The term "proceeds," used in Rev. St. 1898, § 1158, exempting the "proceeds" of a sale of a homestead for one year after the receipt thereof, means some tangible thing which is the subject of manual delivery and receipt. Christensen v. Beebe, 91 Pac. 129, 131, 32 Utah, 406.

The term "proceeds," used in a contract employing an agent, whose commission is to be based upon the "proceeds" of goods shipped to and sold by him, means amounts realized on the goods. Poland v. Hollander, 115 N. Y. Supp. 1042, 1043, 62 Misc. Rep. 523.

A bank check received by a county treasurer and receipted for as money on a sale of county bonds is "proceeds of sale," within the meaning of the act under which the bonds were issued, and therefore within the protection of the official bond of the treasurer. Montgomery County v. Cochran, 126 Fed. 456, 458, 459, 62 C. C. A. 70.

Testator devised certain real estate to the support of any child of his daughter's marriage, of which there was none, and, in case such child should not reach majority, gave the real estate or the proceeds derived from the same to his daughter, and provided that, in the event of the sale hereafter had of said premises, on the death of the daughter the proceeds should be paid over to a granddaughter. Testator sold the premises, taking back a mortgage for the price. Held that, as the fee of the property was devised, should testator die possessed, the "proceeds from the premises" meant the proceeds from the sale of the premises, and this whether such sale occurred before or after testator's death. Hoffman v. Steubing, 98 N. Y. Supp. 706, 708, 49 Misc. Rep. 157.

As net proceeds

The word "proceeds," as used in a contract whereby plaintiff was to receive all the proceeds of logs delivered by one defendant to another, after deducting advances made thereon by the other, means net proceeds after all charges for delivery, including raftage and boomage, have been paid. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 85 South. 828, 83 Miss. 499.

The word "proceeds," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 98, § 2, relative to Sabbath breaking, but which permits the giving on Sunday of an entertainment by a religious or charitable society, the "proceeds" of which, if any, are to be devoted exclusively to a charitable or religious purpose, means the net returns after the payment of necessary expenses incidental to the entertainment, taking into account not only that which is received but that which is incidentally and properly paid out. Commonwealth v. Alexander, 70 N. E. 1017, 1018, 185 Mass. 551.

The term "proceeds" in an assignment of the proceeds of fruit consigned to a commission merchant includes only the amount remaining after deduction of freight, duties, and other necessary expenses incurred in order to put the goods in condition to be sold. Coles v. Saitta, 130 N. Y. Supp. 857, 859, 71 Misc. Rep. 544.

In an action by a parent to recover for the services of his minor child, an instruction that the word "proceeds," as used in the statute, which provides that until majority a child remains under control of the father, who is entitled to his services and the "proceeds" of his labor, means the proceeds of his labor reduced by the necessary expenses of maintenance, was not erroneous. Culbertson v. Alabama Const. Co., 56 S. E. 765, 767, 127 Ga. 599, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 411, 9 Ann. Cas. 507.

As power to sell

A testamentary gift to persons named of testator's personal and real estate for the use of designated beneficiaries, with the provision that "the proceeds of said property be equally divided after my personal expenses are met," impliedly confers on the persons named the right to sell the real estate to distribute the proceeds; the word "proceeds" justifying the inference that a sale is implied. Corley v. Bishop, 58 South. 360, 101 Miss. 490.

As profit

See Profit.

Of life insurance

A bankrupt carried a policy of life insurance for $3,000, payable to his executor or administrator, and after his petition in bankruptcy was filed, and after his decease, the proceeds, less a loan thereon, were paid to his administrator, and in a proceeding by his trustee in bankruptcy the trustee was awarded the cash surrender value of the policy. Code 1906, § 2141, provides "that the 'proceeds' of a life insurance policy not exceeding $3,000, payable to the executor or administrator of the insured, shall inure to the heirs, * * * freed from all liability for the debts of the decedent." Held, that under the statute the whole "proceeds" of the policy, including the cash surrender value, were exempt, and that the administrator was entitled thereto. Dreyfus v. Barton, 54 South. 254, 255, 98 Miss. 758.

Testator by his will bequeathed two policies of insurance, made out in the name of his daughter, "the proceeds from same" to be placed at interest for her use and that of her foster mother, and provided that his administrator should give of the first moneys in his hands $300 to such mother, all the balance of his estate to go to his wife. Thereafter the estate was substituted as a beneficiary in the policies. Held, that the word "proceeds" merely distinguished between the policies and what would be realized thereon in connection with the matter of investment; and the daughter took an absolute estate in the proceeds, subject to the life interest in the mother. In re Thompson's Estate, 82 Atl. 1108, 1109, 234 Pa. 82.

PROCESS

See In Process of Collection; Secret Process.

It is when the term "process" is used to represent the means or method of producing a result that it is patentable, and it will include all methods or means, not natures, which are not effected by mechanism or mechanical combinations. Cameron Septic Tank Co. v. Village of Saratoga Springs, 151 Fed. 242, 261.

"A 'process' is a mode of treatment of certain materials to produce a given result. It is an act, or a series of acts, performed upon the subject-matter to be transformed and reduced to a different state or thing. If new and useful, it is just as patentable as is a piece of machinery. In the language of the patent law, it is an art. The machinery pointed out as suitable to perform the process may or not be new or patentable, whilst the process itself may be altogether new and produce an entirely new result. The process requires that certain things should be done with certain substances, and in a certain order; but the tools to be used in doing this may be of secondary consequence." A process patent can only be anticipated by a similar process. Johnson v. Foos Mfg. Co., 141 Fed. 73, 85, 72 C. C. A. 105 (quoting and adopting definition in Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 780, 24 L. Ed. 139).

Apparatus distinguished

"A 'process' and an 'apparatus' by which it is performed are distinct things. They may be found in one patent. They may be the subject of different patents." San Francisco Cornice Co. v. Beyrle, 195 Fed. 516, 519, 115 C. C. A. 426 (quoting definition in Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 495, 500, 213 U. S. 301, 318, 53 L. Ed. 805).

Machine or machinery distinguished

ing on materials to produce a certain result, so that one may be using the same process as another, though using different machinery in applying it. Eastern Extracting Co. v. Greater New York Extracting Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 738, 739, 126 App. Div. 928 (quoting Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 780, 24 L. Ed. 139; Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 707, 26 L. Ed. 279).

A "machine" is a thing. A "process" is an act, or a mode of acting. The one is visible to the eye, an object of perpetual observation; the other is a conception of the mind, seen only by its effects when being executed or performed. Either may be the means of producing a useful result. A "process" is a mode of treatment of certain materials to produce a given result. It is an act, or a series of acts, performed upon the subject-matter to be transformed and reduced to a different state or thing. If new and useful, it is just as patentable as is a piece of machinery. A "process" which may be patented is not restricted to those involving mechanical or other similar elemental action, but an invention or discovery of a process or a method involving mechanical operations and producing a new and useful result is within the scope of Rev. St. § 4896, securing protection to the inventor of "any new or useful machine, manufacture, or composition of matter or any new and useful improvement thereof." Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, 29 Sup. Ct. 652, 657, 214 U. S. 366, 384, 53 L. Ed. 1034 (quoting and adopting definitions in Curt Pat. [4th Ed.] § 14; 1 Rob. Pat. § 167; Walk. Pat. [4th Ed.] § 3; Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 780, 24 L. Ed. 139; Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 707, 26 L. Ed. 279; Westinghouse v. Boyden Power-Brake Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 707, 170 U. S. 537, 42 L. Ed. 1136). See, also, San Francisco Cornice Co. v. Beyrle, 195 Fed. 516, 519, 115 C. C. A. 426.

A "machine" is a thing. A "process" is an act or mode of acting. The one is visible to the eye, an object of perpetual observation; the other is a conception of the mind seen only by its effects when being executed or being performed. Either may be the means of producing useful results. The mixing of certain substances together or the heating of certain substances to a certain temperature is a "process." If the mode of doing it or the apparatus in or by which it may be done is sufficiently obvious to suggest itself to a person skilled in the particular art, it is enough in the patent to point out the process to be performed without giving supererogatory directions as to the apparatus or method to be employed. If the mode of applying the process is not obvious, then a description of a particular mode by which it may be applied is sufficient. There is then a description of the process and of one practical mode in which it may be applied. Kirchberger v. American Acetylene Burner Co., 124 Fed. 764, 775.

The term "machine" includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result. But where the result or effect is produced by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, of one substance to another, such modes, methods, or operations are called "processes." A new process is usually the result of a discovery; a machine, of invention. But the term "process" is often used in a more vague sense in which it cannot be the subject of a patent. Thus we say that a board is undergoing the process of being planed, grain of being ground, iron of being hammered or rolled. Here the term is used subjectively or passively, as applied to the material operated on, and not to the method or mode of producing that operation, which is by mechanical means, or the use of a machine, as distinguished from a process. In this use of the term it represents the function of a machine, or the effect produced by it on the material subjected to the action of the machine. But it is well settled that a man cannot have a patent for the function or abstract effect of a machine, but only for the machine which produces it. Denning Wire & Fence Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey, 189 Fed. 795, 796, 95 C. C. A. 259.

A "process" is an instrument in an epistolary form running in the name of the sovereign of a state and issued out of a court of justice, or by a judge thereof, at the commencement of an action or at any time during its progress or incident thereto, usually under seal of the court, duly attested and directed to some municipal officer or to the party to be bound by it, commanding the commission of some act at or within a specified time, or prohibiting the doing of some act. The cardinal requisites are that the instrument issue from a court of justice, or a judge thereof; that it run in the name of the sovereign of the state; that it be duly attested, but not necessarily by the judge, though usually, but not always, under seal; and that it be directed to some one commanding or prohibiting the commission of an act. Watson v. Keystone Ironworks Co., 74 Pac. 272, 273, 70 Kan. 43.

The word "process," as used in the phrase "due process of law," indicates the method that may be employed to accomplish the purpose of the law, and is the mode by which the purpose of the law may be effected. Jenkins v. Ballantyne, 30 Pac. 760, 8 Utah, 245, 16 L. R. A. 689.

"Processes" issue upon pleadings, orders, and judgments, and must be conformable to such pleadings when issued on them. Farmers' Banking & Loan Co. v. Mauck, 97 N. W. 835, 836, 70 Neb. 586.

As all proceedings

"Process" in its broadest sense comprehends all proceedings to the accomplishment of an end, including judicial proceedings. Frequently its signification is limited to the means of bringing a party into court. In the Constitution process which at the common law would have run in the name of the king is intended. In the Code process issued from a court is meant. McKenna v. Cooper, 101 Pac. 662, 663, 79 Kan. 847 (quoting Hannah v. Russel, 12 Minn. 80 [Gil. 43]; Black Com. 279; Bouv. Law Dict.).

Code Civ. Proc. § 3463, defines "process" as a writ issued in the course of judicial proceedings, and "writ" is defined as a written order or precept, issued in the name of the state, of a court or judicial officer. Section 2170 makes any unlawful interference with the process or proceedings of a court a contempt. Sections 840-843, in relation to the recovery of possession of personal property, provides that, when a delivery is claimed, plaintiff must make an affidavit stating certain facts, and that he may, by an indorsement on the affidavit, require the sheriff of the county to take the property from defendant, and the officer is required to serve on the defendant a copy of the affidavit and undertaking. And so where defendant in replevin refused to receive a copy of papers, and threatened the officer with violence if he took possession of the property, and while the officer was absent seeking assistance secreted the property, he was guilty of a contempt, though he had not been served with summons and though the order indorsed by plaintiff on the affidavit was not strictly within the definition of "process" State ex rel. Bruce v. District Court, 83 Pac. 641, 642, 33 Mont. 359.

The word "process," in Gen. St. 1901, § 1261, requiring that a foreign corporation doing business in the state file its written consent that actions may be commenced against it by service of process on the Secretary of State, includes writs issued in both civil and criminal actions for bringing parties into court. State v. International Harvester Co. of America, 99 Pac. 603, 604, 79 Kan. 371.

Pol. Code, § 4175, declares that "process" includes all writs, summons, and orders of courts of justice. Hooper v. McDade, 82 Pac. 1116, 1118, 1 Cal. App. 733.

Attachment

An order of attachment is "process," within the meaning of Code 1899, c. 41, §§ 23, 24, against which the right to exempt personal property may be exercised. Brown v. Beckwith, 51 S. E. 977-979, 58 W. Va. 140, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 778, 112 Am. St. Rep. 955.

As civil action

See Civil Action—Case—Suit—etc.

Commitment

An order of commitment for trial issued by a magistrate before whom a person is brought for examination upon a felony charge is not a "process" issued on a final judgment within Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. § 4867, providing that no court shall inquire into the legality of a process issued on a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, whereby a party is in custody or discharge him when the term of commitment has not expired. Ex parte Johnson, 98 Pac. 461, 1 Okl. Cr. 414.

Information, indictment, or motion

An information is not a "process," within Const. art. 5, § 38, requiring all processes to run in the name of the state of South Dakota. State v. Carlisle, 139 N. W. 127, 129, 30 S. D. 475.

An information is not a "writ" or "process." It is an accusation, upon which writs and processes issue. The clause of the Constitution providing that the style of all writs and processes shall be "the state of Oklahoma," does not require an information to begin with these words. It is sufficient if it appears from the record of a case that the prosecution was carried on in the name and by the authority of the state. But, as a matter of good pleading, it is well for indictments and informations to begin with these words. Caples v. State, 104 Pac. 493, 494, 497, 3 Okl. Cr. 72, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033 (citing 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7531).

Notice

The word "process," as used in Rev. St. § 911, providing that all writs and processes issuing from the courts of the United States shall be under the seal of the court from which they issue, and shall be signed by the clerk thereof, means an order of the court, although it may be issued by the clerk. The summons in a common-law action is a "process," but the word does not apply to a notice given under Code Va. 1887, § 3211, authorizing a judgment on a contract to be obtained on motion after 15 days' notice to defendant; and under the Conformity Act, Rev. St. § 914, an action may be instituted by such a notice in a federal court in Virginia in accordance with the state practice. Leas & McVitty v. Merriman, 132 Fed. 510, 513.

P. L. 1898, p. 648, §§ 9, 10, authorizes the orphans' court to entertain jurisdiction for partition of lands on "application by petition made by one or more of said coparceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common," and requires the person proposing to apply to the court for partition to give four weeks' notice to all co-tenants of the time when the petition will be presented to the court. Held, that the orphans' court acquires no jurisdiction until the petition for partition is presented; the notice required not being "process," and until the petition is presented there is no pending cause in the orphans' court, which will abate a suit for partition in chancery, filed after such notice is given. Brown v. Gaskill, 70 Atl. 665, 74 N. J. Eq. 620.

Notice of appeal

A notice of appeal is not a writ or summons within Rev. Codes 1905, § 6738, defining "process" as a writ or summons issued in a judicial proceeding, and need not be served in the manner in which "process" is required to be served. Gooler v. Eldness, 121 N. W. 83, 85, 18 N. D. 338.

Order of publication

An order for publication of notice of sale of real estate, being a substituted process for the sale of real estate, is "process and notice" within the meaning of the act changing the time for holding the April term of the probate court, and so the clerk properly changed the return day of an order of publication made before passage of the act so as to conform the same thereto. Rhodes v. Bell, 130 S. W. 465, 469, 230 Mo. 188.

As proceeding

See Proceeding.

Proclamation

The word "process" has a general and a restrictive meaning. In its restrictive sense it applies to judicial writs issued in an action. In its general meaning it is synonymous with "proceeding," and embraces the entire proceedings in an action from beginning to end. The publication of a proclamation calling an election, being a part of a legislative proceeding rather than a judicial proceeding or action, does not constitute "process." Stearns v. State ex rel. Biggers, 100 Pac. 909, 914, 23 Okl. 462.

Subpoena

A subpoena to testify as a witness is a "process" and when issued out of a court of record, as on the trial of the action, may be issued by the attorney for the party, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 24, without application to a court or judge by signing it himself and testing it in the name of a judge of the court and of its clerk. Lowther v. Lowther, 100 N. Y. Supp. 965, 966, 115 App. Div. 307.

Summons

The words "process" and "summons" as used in the common law and in the statute, are often synonymous, and it has been settled at common law that process and summons were synonymous. Process is the means by which the court compels the appearance of the defendants, and summons is the first process in the institution of an action whereby the defendant is notified to appear and answer. Ackermann v. Berriman, 114 N. Y. Supp. 937, 940, 61 Misc. Rep. 165.

PROCLAMATION

As process, see Process.

Legislation specially named in proclamation, see Specially Named Legislation.

A "proclamation" is that which is proclaimed or publicly announced, and, in law, designates notice by an administrative or executive officer, as by the President or Governor, as to some public matter, or the exercise of some administrative or executive power affecting the public at large, as a proclamation of martial law, a Thanksgiving proclamation. State ex rel. Barrett v. Hitchcock, 146 S. W. 40, 52, 241 Mo. 433.

Under Acts 1903, p. 70, § 2, providing that "the mayor may by proclamation convene the common council in special session," the manner of calling the special session is left in his discretion, and it is within his discretion to call a special meeting by posting a notice on the city hall door and serving each member of the council with a copy. Cushing v. Hartwig, 120 S. W. 109, 110, 138 Mo. App. 114.

PROCURE

The word "procure" means to acquire for one's self; to cause; and the allegation that plaintiff "procured to be issued" to her a policy of insurance is equivalent to an allegation of delivery to and acceptance of such policy by plaintiff. Homestead Fire Ins. Co. v. Ison, 65 S. E. 463, 465, 110 Va. 18; Cunningham v. Royal Neighbors of America, 124 N. W. 434, 435, 24 S. D. 489, 140 Am. St. Rep. 793.

The word "procure" is defined as "to bring about by care and pains"; effect; contrive and effect; induce; cause; as, he procured a law to be passed. United States v. Somers, 164 Fed. 259, 262 (citing Cent. Dict.).

Where an attorney contracted to "procure" for defendant certain school land, and to receive $200 for his services, contingent on success, he did not perform his contract by successfully conducting certain litigation against a prior claimant of the land; the land commissioner having subsequently awarded the land to a third person, on the ground that it was not subject to sale to defendant at the time of his application. Shaw v. Threadgill, 115 S. W. 671, 672, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

By the word "procured," as used by the court in Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 562, 78 Am. Dec. 163, where the court says: "Where the vendor has manufactured the article with his own hands, the inference of knowledge would plainly in many cases be strong enough to charge him even in an action for fraud; but, if the manufacturing is done by agents, the general principles of law would hold the principal responsible for those whom he employs. Whenever the vendor, therefore, has himself manufactured the article sold, or 'procured' it to be done by others, if honest and fair dealing are ever to be enforced by law, a warranty should be implied"—it is not meant buying in the open market from another manufacturer, but simply means procuring the manufacturing to be done by the vendor's own servants or agents. Howard Iron Works v. Buffalo Elevating Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 163, 174, 113 App. Div. 562.

Accessory denoted

Where, on a trial of several persons jointly charged with rape, there was no evidence that any of them was guilty as an accessory before the fact, within St. 1898, § 4614, an instruction that, to hold two or more guilty, the evidence must establish that some one of them performed an act under circumstances constituting rape, and that such others as were held guilty assisted him, by the exercise of force or threats, in committing such particular act, or "procured" him to commit such act, was not erroneous because of the use of the word "procured," for "procure" means to obtain, to bring about, and, as used, the word "procured" was synonymous with "aid" or "abet." Vogel v. State, 119 N. W. 190, 197, 138 Wis. 315.

As cause

One agreeing to give money to others to procure a female to enter the state for immoral purposes, and actively urging, advising, and assisting in having the female brought to his house of ill fame as an inmate, violates the pandering act (Laws 1909, p. 180), punishing any person who shall "procure" a female inmate for a house of ill fame, for the word "procure" means to begin proceedings; to cause a thing to be done. People v. Van Bever, 93 N. E. 725, 727, 248 Ill. 136.

PROCUREMENT

"Procurement" denotes direction, influences, personal exertion, interference, or other action, with knowledge or belief that such action would produce certain results, which results are produced. Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912, 917.

In determining whether a broker has earned a commission for procuring a purchaser, what amounts to a "procurement" is a question of fact, and it is enough that the efforts of the broker, acting upon the purchaser, are the efficient cause of his offer to purchase, but they need not be the sole cause. Handley v. Shaffer (Ala.) 59 South. 286, 291.

"Procurement" is defined to be the act of procuring, obtaining, bringing about, or effecting, etc. And so an averment that the procurement of the miscarriage was not necessary to preserve the life of the woman is equivalent to an averment that the miscarriage was not necessary to preserve her life. Willey v. State, 52 Ind. 246, 250, 251 (quoting Webster).

"Fraud in the procurement of the note" means "fraud in its procurement by the holder thereof, and has no reference to fraud in the contract out of which the note arises." Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Roberts & McClure, 53 S. E. 808, 125 Ga. 41.

PROCURING CAUSE

In order to be entitled to commissions for the sale of real estate, the broker must show that he was the "procuring cause of the sale"; that he was the first to call the buyer's attention to the property; and that it was through his efforts that the sale was made; or, where the purchaser is not introduced by the broker, he must show that it was through his active negotiations that a satisfactory arrangement was finally reached; the active negotiations required being not a single introduction of the parties, but a carrying back and forth of propositions, etc., which result in the sale. Wood v. Smith, 127 N. W. 277, 279, 162 Mich. 334. See, also, Langford v. Issenhuth, 134 N. W. 889, 893, 28 S. D. 451; Sallee v. McMurry, 88 S. W. 157, 160, 113 Mo. App. 253 (citing Gelatt v. Ridge, 23 S. W. 882, 117 Mo. 553, 38 Am. St. Rep. 683; Timberman v. Craddock, 70 Mo. 638; Tyler v. Parr, 52 Mo. 249; Bell v. Kaiser, 50 Mo. 150; Wright & Orison v. Brown, 68 Mo. App. 577; Brennan v. Roach, 47 Mo. App. 290).

PRODUCE

The word "produce" means "to be the cause of." Elder v. State, 50 South. 370, 373, 162 Ala. 41 (citing Webster. Int. Dict.).

"Produce" means to bring forward; to lead forth; to offer to view or notice; to exhibit; to show—while "surrender" means to yield to the power of another; to deliver up; to give up; as a principal surrendered by his bail. Under Pen. Code 1895, § 935, providing that bail may surrender their principal in vacation to the sheriff or in open court in discharge of themselves from liability, producing or presenting a principal in court is not all that is required to discharge the sureties on a bail bond. In order for a surrender of the principal in open court to be effective, the attention of the court must be called to the presence of the accused principal, and the intention to surrender him must be definitely expressed and understood. Perkins v. Terrell, 58 S. E. 133, 135, 1 Ga. App. 250 (quoting Webster. Int. Dict.).

A broker employed to sell land, while "bound to produce a purchaser" is not required to exhibit him in person to the owner, but it is sufficient that the purchaser had authorized the broker to say to the owner that he will take the land. McCray & Son v. Pfost, 94 S. W. 998, 999, 118 Mo. App. 672.

Statements compiled by employes of a corporation from its books and records, which were before a grand jury and produced to the grand jury by an officer of the corporation on a subpoena duces tecum, do not constitute testimony given or documentary evidence produced by such officer within the meaning of Act Feb. 25, 1903, c. 755, § 1, 32 Stat. 904, which grants immunity in certain cases to a witness "on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise"; the preparation or production of the statements in such case being the act of the corporation, and not of the witness. Helke v. United States, 192 Fed. 83, 88, 112 C. C. A. 615.

PRODUCE (Noun)

Under the condition of a bond that a person should enjoy one-fifth part of a farm free of all expenses, the word "produce" included hay, as the word "produce" has the largest signification of any word which could be used in such connection. Luques v. Thompson, 26 Me. 514, 517.

PRODUCT

See Farm Product; Logs and Other Timber Products.

Petroleum products, see Petroleum.

Raw products, see Raw.

"The word 'product' imports an article which is made of something, and which, when made, has characteristics which are apparent to the senses." Elder v. State, 50 South. 370, 373, 162 Ala. 41 (quoting and adopting the definition in 6 Words and Phrases, p. 563; Webster. Int. Dict.; Stand. Dict.).

The courts judicially know that cotton is a farm product, included within those "products" mentioned in Pen. Code 1910, § 553, under which payment by means of a worthless check is punishable by law. Whitaker v. State, 70 S. E. 990, 991, 9 Ga. App. 213.

PRODUCTION

A sublessee under an oil lease contracted to sell oil. The contract recited that it was its desire to sell its "production" to the buyer and the desire of the buyer to purchase the "production." The sublessee contracted to sell 300,000 net barrels of oil, to be delivered in installments before a designated date, the contract to terminate when the total net barrels had been delivered. The contract referred to the lease, which gave the lessor the option to take as rent one-sixth of the product, or one-sixth of the proceeds, and gave the lessor the right to purchase all the oil produced at the ruling market price, and made the lease a part thereof. Held, that the word "production" in the contract did not refer merely to the five-sixths part of the production which the seller was authorized to mine and sell, but the seller was required to deliver the quantities called for, though it might require the delivery of the rental in kind, to which the lessor was entitled, unless the lessor should exercise his option to purchase, or give direction as to the disposition to be made of its royalty. Coalinga Pac. Oil & Gas Co. v. Associated Oil Co., 116 Pac. 1107, 1110, 16 Cal. App. 361.

See Unproductive.

PROFANE—PROFANITY

"As a general rule, words are 'profane' or not, according to the sense in which they are used; and it is necessary to show by other words coupled with them the sense in which they are used, to make a valid charge of using profane language." Roberts v. State, 47 S. E. 511, 120 Ga. 177.

The word "profane," in an indictment drawn under a statute aimed at the use of vulgar, obscene, or "profane" language, may be merely epithetic of the general nature of the offense, and does not fall within the rule that, where the facts are alleged with needless particularity, the unnecessary allegations cannot be rejected as surplusage. The words, "You woman with the big fat rump," were not profane, and the use of the word "profane" in the indictment could be rejected as pure surplusage. Holcombe v. State, 62 S. E. 647, 648, 5 Ga. App. 47 (citing Bish. New Or. Proc. § 480).

Since "profane language" means language irreverent toward God or holy things, proof that defendant called another a liar in a public street did not show disorderly conduct in the public use of profane language. City of Georgetown v. Scurry, 73 S. E. 353, 354, 90 S. C. 346.

The words, "Go to hell, you low-down devils," is not a violation of a statute, making it an offense to "profanely swear or curse in any public place in the presence" of others, since the language does not imprecate divine vengeance nor imply divine condemnation. Sanford v. State, 44 South. 801, 91 Miss. 158.

PREFERENCE

See Autoptic Preference.

PROFERT

The purpose of making "profert" of a deed, letters testamentary, letters of administration, or other instruments under seal is to enable the opposite party to crave oyer thereof. The purpose of "oyer" is to enable the party craving it to hear the deed, etc., read, so that he may enter it upon the pleading and take advantage of any part thereof not already pleaded by his adversary. Thus a defendant may crave oyer and set out letters of administration if he wish to avail himself of any variance in the statement of them in the declaration. Sautter v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 63 Atl. 994, 995, 73 N. J. Law, 455 (citing 1 Chit. Plead. 431, 432).

PROFESSION

See Learned Profession; Publicly Profess to be Physician.

As property, see Property.

As trade, see Trade.

The term "profession" signifies an employment requiring a learned education, as those of law and physics, and is applied to a calling which requires learning and special preparation in the acquirement of such knowledge and skill, and, in its broader meaning, is defined to be the occupation, if not mechanical or agricultural, or the like, to which one devotes one's self; the business which one professes to understand and to follow for a subsistence, calling, vocation, employment. Semple v. Schwartz, 109 S. W. 633, 636, 130 Mo. App. 65 (citing Netterville v. Barber, 52 Miss. 171; Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 33 S. W. 710).

The word "profession," in its larger meaning, means occupation, if not mechanical or agricultural, or the like, to whatever one devotes one's self; the business which one professes to understand and follow. In a restricted sense it only applies to learned professions. It is also defined as a calling, vocation, known employment. Geise v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. (Tex.) 107 S. W. 555.

Express business

Conducting an express agency for the reception and transaction of packages is not a "profession," within the meaning of a statute authorizing municipal corporations to impose a license tax on callings, trades, professions, and occupations. City of Topeka v. Jones, 86 Pac. 162, 163, 74 Kan. 164.

Insurance agent

Code, § 4622, provides that the entries of a person deceased, who was in a position to know the facts, made at or near the time of the transaction, are presumptive evidence of such facts when made in a professional capacity or in the ordinary course of professional conduct. In an action on a fire insurance policy, the insurer offered in evidence entries in a policy register kept by the agent who had issued the policy showing the number, term, and amount of the policy, the name of the insured, the premium rate and the nature of stock insured, attached clauses and permits, etc., and there was testimony that the entries were in the handwriting of the agent and that any subsequent changes in the policy were entered therein. Held, that "professional" is that which pertains to a profession, and that, to constitute a "profession," something more than a mere employment or vocation is essential, that the employment or vocation must be such as exacts the use or application of special learning or attainments of some kind, and that, while such an agency was an occupation or vocation, the entries were not made in a professional capacity or in the course of professional conduct, and hence were inadmissible. Cummins v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 134 N. W. 79, 82, 153 Iowa, 579, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1169, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 235.

Ministers of the gospel

Preachers of the gospel are, in a popular, and also in a technical, sense, professional men, just as much as physicians, teachers, and lawyers. A minister of the gospel is therefore following a profession, within the law which makes a person liable, without proof of special damage, for words spoken of another, with reference to his profession, calculated to injure him therein; and it is not necessary that such a minister should, at the time the words are spoken, be receiving compensation for his services. Flanders v. Daley, 48 S. E. 327, 120 Ga. 885.

Physician

The word "profession" is defined as the occupation, if not agricultural, mechanical, or the like, which one follows, and a physician practicing medicine is engaged in an occupation within the meaning of an ordinance levying a tax on the occupation of physicians. Village of Dodge v. Guidinger, 127 N. W. 122, 123, 87 Neb. 349, 138 Am. St. Rep. 494.

Undertaker

The business of embalming and undertaking is not a "profession," within a statute exempting professional instruments, etc., from execution. O'Reilly v. Erlanger, 95 N. Y. Supp. 760, 761, 108 App. Div. 318.

PROFESSIONAL

"The term 'professional' can only relate to some of those occupations universally classed as professions, the general duties and character of which the courts must be expected to understand judicially." O'Reilly v. Erlanger, 95 N. Y. Supp. 760, 761, 108 App. Div. 318.

"Professional" is that which pertains to a profession. To constitute a "profession," something more than a mere employment or vocation is essential. The employment or vocation must be such as exacts the use or application of special learning or attainments of some kind, so that, while an insurance agency is an occupation or vocation, the entries in the policy register kept by the agent are not made in a professional capacity or in the course of professional conduct, and hence are inadmissible. Cummins v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 134 N. W. 79, 82, 153 Iowa, 579, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1169, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 235.

PROFESSIONAL CAPACITY

A physician called to treat a patient against his will acts "in a professional capacity," within Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibiting the disclosure by a physician of professional information. Meyer v. Supreme Lodge K. P., 70 N. E. 111, 112, 178 N. Y. 63, 64 L. R. A. 839.

Insanity Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 27) § 90, makes it incumbent upon those in charge of state hospitals for the insane to make entries from time to time of the mental state of a patient. Section 93 provides that, upon return of a writ of habeas corpus upon application of an insane person or in his behalf, the medical history of the patient shall be in evidence. Section 45 provides for the care and treatment of indigent patients and the personal examination of their condition in such institutions. Held, that the relation arising by operation of law between a patient committed and the official physician in charge is not a professional relation contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. § 834, and, in an action to annul a marriage for insanity, testimony of a physician of a state insane hospital to which the alleged insane spouse was committed was admissible to prove her insanity. Liske v. Liske, 135 N. Y. Supp. 176, 178.

PROFESSIONAL DUTIES

See Gross Violation of Professional Duties.

PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYMENT

Where an attorney is employed in procuring a loan, but merely as an agent, the communications between him and his principal do not relate to a "professional employment," under Code Civ. Proc. § 835, relating to communications with a client, and the communication is not privileged. Lifschits v. O'Brien, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1091, 1092, 143 App. Div. 180.

PROFESSIONAL INSTRUMENT

A desk, safe, and candelabra, belonging to an undertaker and used by him in his business, are not professional instruments, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1391, exempting "professional instruments, furniture, and library" from execution; such provision not applying to the office furniture and tools of an ordinary business man. O'Reilly v. Erlanger, 95 N. Y. Supp. 760, 761, 108 App. Div. 818.

PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

The services of a member of a law firm rendered in caring for the property and interests of his wife and relatives in probate proceedings are not "professional services," and the earnings therein are not partnership property. Roth v. Boles, 115 N. W. 930, 935, 139 Iowa, 253.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 64b (3), 30 Stat. 563, which authorizes the allowance of "one reasonable attorney's fee for the professional services actually rendered * * * to the bankrupt in involuntary cases while performing the duties herein prescribed," does not authorize such allowance of fees for all legal work the attorney may do for the bankrupt in the proceeding, but only for that which the referee or the court may consider was required by the provisions of law and the necessities of the proceeding. In re Payne, 151 Fed. 1018.

PROFILE

The term "profile," as used in Act March 3, 1875, 18 Stat. 482, c. 152, relating to grants of right of way through public lands and providing for the filing of a "profile" of the road, means a map of alignment. Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Stalker, 94 Pac. 56, 61, 14 Idaho, 362 (citing 32 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 423).

A "profile" within the meaning of Act March 3, 1875, c. 152, § 4, 18 Stat. 483, which provides that any railroad company desiring to secure right of way thereunder through public lands shall file with the register of the land office a profile of its road, etc., is the outline of a vertical section through a country or line of work, showing actual or projected elevations and hollows. United States v. Minidoka & S. W. R. Co., 190 Fed. 491, 498, 111 C. C. A. 323.

Sharing profits as constituting partnership, see Partnership.

The word "profits" is susceptible of the construction that it includes the difference between the actual cost and the selling prices. Cooke v. Cain, 77 Pac. 682, 683, 35 Wash. 853.

The term "profits," allowed to plaintiff in an action of covenant, has reference to the gain which he would have made if he had been permitted to complete his contract. Gardner v. Deeds & Hirsig, 92 S. W. 518, 519, 116 Tenn. 128, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740, 7 Ann. Cas. 1172 (adopting definition in Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. [54 U. S.] 307, 14 L. Ed. 157).

That which the directors of the corporation distribute among its stockholders, without intrenchment upon capital, must be comprehended within the term "profits." In an action involving the respective rights of a widow, who was entitled to the income and profits of corporate stock for life, and the remaindermen, on a distribution of the corporation's cash surplus, evidence held to show that the surplus was not based upon the sale of corporate real estate, but upon the excess of revenue remaining after the payment of annual dividends, and belonged to the widow. Robertson v. De Brulatur, 80 N. E. 938, 942, 188 N. Y. 301 (quoting and adopting definition in McLouth v. Hunt, 48 N. E. 548, 154 N. Y. 179, 39 L. R. A. 230).

The failure of a testator to use the word "profits" in connection with personal estate when he has used the same in connection with real estate does not indicate that he did not mean to include the "profits" of a store business. The words "rents, issues, and 'profits'" are so commonly connected together with reference to the income of real estate that failure to use the word "profits" in connection with personal estate is of little significance. What are called "rents, issues, and profits" in real estate are the same as what are naturally called "interest and income" with reference to personal property. The word "profits" may naturally be used when referring to the proceeds of a mercantile business as a mercantile enterprise as between the executors and the legatee, while the word "income" would be a more natural description of these "profits" after they had reached the executor's hands and as between the executors and the legatees. Oram v. Peirce, 67 Atl. 1053, 1056, 73 N. J. Eq. 391.

An association, formed for the purpose of mining and trading in California, stipulated that a statement of its affairs should be made in one year, and that a division of the profits over and above the original capital invested should then be made pro rata to each and every member of the association. The defendant sent out one man holding one share, and took an assignment of the share to himself, and the man sent out agreed to remit to defendant one-half of the profits of such share. The defendant, in consideration of $300, guaranteed to the plaintiffs one-fourth part of the "profits" of such one share, when the dividend should be made according to the form of the copartnership. On their way out the association dissolved, sold

Under Const. art. 7, § 8, giving the circuit courts original jurisdiction of criminal and civil matters in all cases, not hereafter prohibited by law, the general jurisdiction of the circuit courts is "prohibited by law" when jurisdiction has been in terms or by necessary implication conferred upon some other court. Goyke v. State, 117 N. W. 1027, 1029, 136 Wis. 557.

"Prohibition" is not a crusade against the use of medicines, household remedies, culinary and toilet articles, and all "soft drinks." It is a crusade against the multi-form evils of intemperance caused by the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and therefore a crusade against vice and crime greater in extent and enormity than the combined evils of war, pestilence, and famine. The intention of the Legislature in enacting the prohibition statute (Acts 1907, p. 81) was to prevent the evils of intemperance caused by the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The laws should be interpreted so as to accomplish this beneficent purpose. There should be a reasonable construction, equally removed on the one hand from that extreme strictness which would make it unpopular or ridiculous, and difficult of enforcement and, on the other, from that latitude which would render it ineffective. Roberts v. State, 60 S. E. 1082, 1086, 4 Ga. App. 207.

As conferring power to punish

The word "prohibit," as used in the title of an act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, is sufficiently broad to authorize legislation making penal the sale which is prohibited by the act. James v. State, 52 S. E. 295, 124 Ga. 72.

As exclude

See Exclude.

As regulate

Power to regulate, as conferring power to prohibit, see Regulate; Regulate Commerce.

The word "prohibit," in an act granting a city council authority to regulate or prohibit the use or placing of telegraph, telephone, or light poles in or over the streets, has been construed as simply granting authority to make proper regulations to preserve to the public use of the streets as common highways of travel. City of Wichita v. Old Colony Trust Co., 132 Fed. 641, 646, 66 C. C. A. 19 (citing Michigan Tel. Co. v. City of Benton Harbor, 80 N. W. 386, 121 Mich. 512, 47 L. R. A. 104).

"Prohibition," as applied to the sale of intoxicating liquors, means interdiction of the liberty of making and selling or giving away intoxicating liquors, for other than medicinal, scientific, and religious purposes; the prohibiting by law of the sale of alcoholic liquors. Thus a prohibitory law, to be classed as such, must in the same instant and in the same way become effective to interdict the sale of liquors throughout all parts of the jurisdiction of the lawmaking power, while "regulation" means to restrict and control the authorized sale of liquors by providing the conditions under which sales may be made. McPherson v. State, 90 N. E. 610, 613, 174 Ind. 60, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188.

"Regulation" and "prohibition" are distinct and incongruous subjects of legislation. The prohibitory act is not unconstitutional on the ground that the exceptions created by the act provide the methods whereby those exceptions may be availed of without violating the major purposes of the act, and contains the subject of regulations, as well as the subject of prohibition of dealings in intoxicants foreshadowed by the title, for while, in a sense, regulation is accomplished by the act it is only a method by which the universal prohibition is bereft of its penalizing qualities by affording exceptions to those who comply with the act. State ex rel. Woodward v. Skeggs, 46 South. 288, 273, 154 Ala. 249 (quoting and adopting definition in Miller v. Jones, 80 Ala. 89).

As restrain

See Restrain.

PROHIBITED MARRIAGE

A marriage which may at once be valid to all intents and purposes, and involves the parties or third persons in penal consequences, is called a "prohibited marriage." Hunt v. Hunt, 100 Pac. 541, 542, 23 Okl. 490, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1202 (quoting Stew. Marriage & Divorce, § 49).

PROHIBITION (Writ of)

Return to writ, see Return.

"The office of a writ of 'prohibition' is to restrain excess or improper assumption of jurisdiction." Taylor v. Bliss, 57 Atl. 939, 26 R. I. 16.

The writ of "prohibition" is an extraordinary judicial writ, directed to an inferior tribunal to prevent use or usurpation of judicial functions. Norton v. Emery, 81 Atl. 671, 672, 108 Me. 472.

"The writ of 'prohibition' may be invoked to check the use of judicial power when sought to be exerted beyond the lines which the law has marked as the limits of the operation of the power." State ex rel. Pulliam v. Fort, 81 S. W. 476, 478, 107 Mo. App. 328.

"A writ of 'prohibition' may be defined as an extraordinary judicial writ, issuing out of a court of superior jurisdiction, and directed to an inferior court, for the purpose of preventing the inferior tribunal from usurping a jurisdiction with which it is not legally vested." People ex rel. Metz v. Day- are devoted to school purposes does not exempt it from taxation, so that the income of a school which may be used for any purpose by it, or is in fact being loaned out on interest, is not exempt; but a fund donated to it, to be held to use the income for endowing free scholarships, is exempt, such income not being a "profit." Monticello Seminary v. Board of Review of Madison County, 94 N. E. 938, 249 Ill. 481.

"Earnings expended on a new structure may or may not be 'profits.' Whether they are or not depends on other things to be taken into the account besides the mere fact of such expenditure." Grant v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co., 93 U. S. 225, 228, 23 L. Ed. 878.

"If a railroad company should make a second track when they had but a single track before, this would be a betterment or permanent improvement, and if paid out of the earnings would be fairly characterized 'profits used in construction.'" City of Erie v. Erie Gas & Mineral Co., 97 Pac. 468, 469, 78 Kan. 348 (quoting with approval from Grant v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co., 93 U. S. 225, 23 L. Ed. 878).

Increase in value

Where all of the stockholders in a corporation having a capital of $15,000 agreed that the plant, good will, etc., was worth $25,000, the increase of $10,000 could be treated as "profits" in reorganizing the company, and stock to that amount issued to the stockholders in proportion to their holdings in the old corporation. McGinnis v. O'Connor, 72 Atl. 614, 615, 111 Md. 695.

As net earnings or income

"Profit" implies, without more, the gain resulting from the employment of capital; the excess of receipts over expenditures. Fechteler v. Palm Bros. & Co., 183 Fed. 462, 469, 96 C. C. A. 336 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

The word "profits" in a manufacturing or agricultural business means the net earnings or the excess of returns over expenditures, and relates to any excess which remains after deducting from the returns the operating expenses and depreciation in capital, and also, in a proper case, interest on capital employed. Morrow v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 123 S. W. 1034, 1039, 140 Mo. App. 200.

"The term 'profits,' out of which dividends alone can properly be declared, denotes what remains after defraying every expense, including loans falling due, as well as the interest on such loans." Mobile & O. R. Co. v. State of Tennessee, 14 Sup. Ct. 968, 971, 153 U. S. 486, 38 L. Ed. 793.

The surplus over and above the capital stock and the debts of a corporation constitute the "profits," which term is synonymous with net earnings. Mangham v. State, 75 S. E. 508, 510, 11 Ga. App. 440.

Under Act No. 241 of 1908, § 1, making it unlawful for any corporation to declare any dividends except from actual profits, or to withdraw or in any manner to pay the stockholders any portion of the company's capital stock, the term "profits" denotes what remains after defraying every expense, including loans falling due, as well as the interest on such loans. Van Vleet v. Evangeline Oil Co., 56 South. 343, 129 La. 406.

"Profits" represent the net gain made from an investment or from the prosecution of some business. Webster defines the word as "acquisition beyond expenditure; excess of value received for producing, keeping, or selling over cost; hence pecuniary gain in any transaction or occupation." When the "profits" of a business depend solely on the personal efforts of him who prosecutes it, they form an accurate measure of his earning capacity; but, when capital is also required, this must be taken into account, and his power to earn money may be inferred, though with approximate accuracy only. It has been said that the "'profits' derived from capital invested in business cannot be considered as earnings, but in many cases 'profits' derived from the management of a business may properly be considered as measuring earning power. This is especially true where the business is one which requires and receives the personal attention and labor of the owner." Mitchell v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 114 N. W. 622, 625, 138 Iowa, 283.

The word "profits," in a lease providing that the lessee should sell everything that was produced on the demised premises and divide the profits with the lessor every month, is what remains of the proceeds of the sales after all expenses incident to running the farm are deducted. Mead v. Owen, 67 Atl. 722, 723, 80 Vt. 273, 13 Ann. Cas. 231.

"A 'profit' is the excess of receipts over expenses, and, in winding up a partnership, nothing is properly divisible as a profit which does not answer this description. So that, when it is once shown that profits have been ascertained and divided, it must be inferred that at least all of the ordinary running expenses of the partnership have been paid, and this would include any outlay or advances made by either partner on account of partnership transactions." Simpson v. Miller, 94 Pac. 567, 568, 51 Or. 232 (citing 2 Lindl. Partn. *394; 1 Lindl. Partn. *382).

An agreement between two persons for the purchase and sale of real estate and a division of the profits, which binds one of them to furnish the money for the purchase, and which binds the other to furnish his efforts and experience, and which provides that the latter shall receive a third of the profits made in the venture, requires that interest on the money furnished for the purchase of unproductive realty from the respective dates of the purchase must be allowed before profits can be distributed; the

"The object and purpose of a 'writ of prohibition' is to prevent a court of peculiar, limited, or inferior jurisdiction from assuming jurisdiction of a matter beyond its legal cognizance." The writ is equally appropriate and available to keep such a court within the boundaries of its lawful power in given cases, no less than to prevent its cognizance of causes not consigned to its jurisdiction. Where a court acted within its jurisdiction in granting a change of venue, a "writ of prohibition" will not lie to correct its procedure, however erroneous it may have been; this question being proper for determination on appeal only. State ex rel. Kochtitzky v. Riley, 101 S. W. 567, 570, 203 Mo. 175, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 900 (citing 2 Bailey, Jurisdiction, § 449; Smith v. Whitney, 6 Sup. Ct. 570, 116 U. S. 167, 29 L. Ed. 601).

Within a statute giving the superior court authority to issue a "writ of prohibition" to arrest proceedings of a tribunal exercising judicial functions in excess of its jurisdiction, and a section providing that the writ will not issue where there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law, the writ will not issue to stay receivership proceedings to provide security for the payment of temporary alimony, etc., from orders for payment of which the husband has appealed, since the writ of supersedeas offers defendant a speedy and adequate remedy to stay the proceedings. McAneny v. Superior Court Santa Clara County, 87 Pac. 1020, 1021, 150 Cal. 6.

The "writ of prohibition," being a prerogative writ to be issued with great caution to secure order and regularity in all tribunals where there is no other regular and ordinary remedy, will not lie to arrest the proceedings in the probate court upon the ground that the testator was not a resident of the district; the issue of residence being open to contest in the probate court and reviewable by appeal. Whitehead v. Roberts, 85 Atl. 538, 541, 86 Conn. 351.

A "writ of prohibition" is an extraordinary writ and is proper to be issued only in cases of extreme necessity. It should appear that it is the only adequate remedy of the party making the application therefor. It will not lie in a case which may be redressed in the ordinary course of judicial proceeding, and is not to be made a substitute for any other method of obtaining the relief sought. If a complete remedy lies by appeal, certiorari, mandamus, or in any other manner, this writ should be denied. It is different from an injunction in that the injunction is addressed to the litigating parties, while a writ of prohibition is addressed to the inferior court itself. Crittenden v. Town of Booneville, 45 South. 723, 725, 92 Miss. 277, 131 Am. St. Rep. 518 (citing High, Extr. Leg. Rem. §§ 762, 763).

"A 'writ of prohibition' is to prevent the exercise by a tribunal possessing judicial powers of jurisdiction over matters not within its cognizance or exceeding its jurisdiction in matters of which it has cognizance." Where relator was a veteran of the class specified in Laws 1904, p. 1694, c. 697, under the express provisions whereof he had a remedy by certiorari to review proceedings against him in case they resulted in his removal or attempted removal from a position held by him by appointment or employment in the city of New York, he was not entitled to an absolute writ of prohibition. People ex rel. Crowley v. Butler, 103 N. Y. Supp. 329, 330, 53 Misc. Rep. 366 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomson v. Tracy, 60 N. Y. 31, 37).

As discretionary writ

A writ of "prohibition" is not a writ of right, but is a matter of sound judicial discretion in each case, and is available only when the inferior court, body, or tribunal is about to act without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction. Rev. Codes 1906, § 7835, expressly declares that the writ is the counterpart of the writ of mandamus. Zinn v. District Court for Barnes County, 114 N. W. 475, 476, 17 N. D. 128.

As injunction

While "prohibition" is similar to the remedy by injunction against proceedings at law, the object in each case being restraint of legal proceedings, an "injunction" is directed only to the parties litigant, and prohibition is directed to the court itself, commanding cessation of exercise of jurisdiction to which it has no legal claim. The right to prohibition implies that a wrong is about to be committed, not by the parties litigant, but by the person or court assuming to exercise judicial power, and against whom the writ is asked. State ex rel. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis v. Tracy, 140 S. W. 883, 890, 237 Mo. 109, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 448.

As mandamus

"Mandamus is a legal remedy to compel action in accordance with legal duty, while 'prohibition' is a legal remedy to restrain action in excess of legal authority." State ex rel. Pelton v. Ross, 81 Pac. 865, 867, 39 Wash. 399 (quoting and adopting definition in Dunklin County v. Dunklin County District Court, 28 Mo. 454).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1102, in defining the writ of "prohibition," provides: "The writ of prohibition is the counterpart of the writ of mandamus. It arrests the proceedings of any tribunal, corporation, board, or person, whether exercising functions judicial or ministerial, when such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal, corporation, board, or person." Beaulieu Vineyard v. Superior Court of Napa County, 91 Pac. 1015, 1017, 6 Cal. App. 242.

Fast acts

"Prohibition" is a restraining, not a corrective, remedy. It "issues only to prevent the commission of a future act, and not to undo an act already performed." Prohibition lies "only to prevent the doing of an act, and can never be used as a remedy for acts already done." Williamson v. Mingo County Court, 48 S. E. 835, 836, 56 W. Va. 38, 3 Ann. Cas. 355 (quoting High, Extr. Leg. Rem. [3d Ed.] § 766; Haldeman v. Davis, 28 W. Va. 324, 326).

As prerogative writ

The "writ of prohibition" is a prerogative writ issued out of a superior court and directed to a judge of an inferior court, or to a party to a suit in an inferior court, or to any person whom it may concern, commanding that no further proceedings be had in a particular case. The writ is as old as the common law itself. The oldest authentic instance of the grant of such a writ was against the bishop in the third year of the reign of Edward III. 2 Rolle, Abr. 1668, p. 281. Originally in England the writ was most frequently employed against the ecclesiastical courts to restrain them from acting without jurisdiction or in excess of jurisdiction, and, while it never issued for the correction of mere errors or irregularities, it was frequently employed in England, where the inferior court proceeded contrary to the course of the common law, or in violation of the principles of law, and even the inferior courts of law were prohibited when so acting. The remedy by prohibition has been always regarded as preventive rather than corrective. It is the counterpart of mandamus, preventing action while mandamus commands action. It is a common-law writ and operates upon courts or others exercising judicial functions, and it is as to courts what an injunction is to individuals. In later days in England, under the judicature act of 1873, it is not uncommon for the writ of prohibition to be accompanied with a writ of injunction. The general rule, both in England and America, is that a writ of prohibition will not lie where the inferior court has jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the particular case belongs. But this does not exhaust the functions of the writ or define the limitations under which it may be properly invoked. The books are full of cases where the writ has been granted in cases where the inferior court has jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the particular case belongs, but in which the inferior court has acted in excess of its jurisdiction, and cases are likewise not wanting in which the writ has been granted where the inferior court, in exercising its jurisdiction, had proceeded outside the course of the principles of law. Cases also exist where the inferior court has been prohibited from acting in cases which belong to the class of cases over which the inferior court originally had jurisdiction, but where the particular case sought to be prohibited was clearly a sham proceeding, not instituted or prosecuted for public good, but for ulterior and unlawful purposes to hinder or obstruct the proper administration of law. This class of cases constitutes what may be termed exceptions to the general rule. State ex rel. McNamee v. Stobie, 92 S. W. 191, 215, 194 Mo. 14 (quoting and adopting definition in Lloyd, Prohibition, p. 45).

Prevention of ministerial acts

"A 'writ of prohibition' is to prevent the exercise of a tribunal possessing judicial powers, of jurisdiction over matters not within its cognizance or exceeding its jurisdiction in matters of which it has cognizance. It will not lie to restrain a ministerial act." Kalbfell v. Wood, 92 S. W. 230, 233, 193 Mo. 675 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomson v. Tracy, 60 N. Y. loc. cit. 87).

"Prohibition" is a writ to restrain judicial and not ministerial acts, though performed by judges. Prohibition does not lie to restrain the commissioners' court from proceeding with the construction of a bridge, for the building of which a contract has been let by it; the allowance of a claim therefor being a ministerial act. Goodwin v. State ex rel. Wakefield, 40 South. 122, 123, 145 Ala. 536 (citing In re Pierce, 8 South. 74, 89 Ala. 177; Atkins v. Siddons, 66 Ala. 453).

Regulation of proceedings of lower court

The writ of "prohibition" only issues in cases where the inferior court is proceeding or is about to proceed in excess of its jurisdiction, and cannot be used to correct anticipated errors. Kinard v. Police Court of City of Oakland, 83 Pac. 176, 2 Cal. App. 179.

"The 'writ of prohibition' is an extraordinary prerogative writ, as old as the common law itself. It lies to prevent the encroachment, excess, or improper assumption of jurisdiction on the part of an inferior court or tribunal. But, where the inferior court has jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, the writ does not lie to prevent an erroneous decision, or to prevent the enforcement of an erroneous judgment. It does not lie to correct errors. Nor is it allowed even in cases of usurpation or abuse of power, unless existing remedies are inadequate or inapplicable. When the encroachment, excess, or improper assumption of jurisdiction can be corrected by appeal, writ of error, or certiorari, prohibition will not lie." Holladay v. Hodge, 65 S. E. 952, 953, 84 S. C. 91.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 479, defining the "writ of prohibition" as an order to an inferior court to prevent the usurpation of jurisdiction, and Cr. Code Prac. § 25, authorizing the circuit court, by writ of prohibition, to restrain other courts of inferior jurisdiction from exceeding their criminal jurisdiction, the circuit court may issue the writ of prohibition to prevent one, claiming to be police judge of a district, from executing a judgment of his court for a fine and costs, where the provision creating the police court has been repealed. Morgis v. Randall, 112 S. W. 856, 858, 129 Ky. 720.

The "writ of prohibition" goes only to restrain the assumed exercise of jurisdiction where none exists, and not to its erroneous or irregular exercise. It is not the office of the writ to usurp the functions of an appeal, and it cannot be assumed that the circuit court will permit an insufficient notice of contest to receive his judicial sanction; but, if he should do so, the remedy of the relator is ample in other directions. State ex rel. Wells v. Hough, 91 S. W. 905, 915, 193 Mo. 615 (citing State ex rel. Brown v. Klein, 22 S. W. 693, 116 Mo. 259 loc. cit. 268).

The function of a "writ of prohibition" is to arrest proceedings without or in excess of jurisdiction, and not to correct errors. Hindman v. Great Western Coal Development & Mining Co., 89 Pac. 894, 895, 46 Wash. 817.

A "writ of prohibition" lies as well to prevent an excessive or unauthorized application of judicial force as where a court assumes judicial power not granted by law. State ex rel. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Williams, 120 S. W. 740, 741, 744, 221 Mo. 227.

A "writ of prohibition" must be directed to some judicial officer. Its purpose is to restrain judicial action and not legislative, executive, or administrative action. A few courts hold that administrative boards exercising quasi judicial function may be reached by the writ, but such holdings are confined to two or three states. State ex rel. McEntee v. Bright, 123 S. W. 1057, 1060, 224 Mo. 514, 135 Am. St. Rep. 552, 20 Ann. Cas. 955 (citing 32 Cyc. p. 600).

A "writ of prohibition" arrests the proceedings of a court when its proceedings are without or in excess of its jurisdiction. Hence, where an appeal from the probate court to the district court has not been perfected by filing the undertaking required by law, and the district court proceeds to try the case, its action may be arrested by a writ of prohibition. Gunderson v. District Court, Fourth Judicial Dist., 94 Pac. 166, 167, 14 Idaho, 478 (citing Rev. St. 1887, § 4994).

Where a court is without jurisdiction, a party is entitled to a "writ of prohibition," which is an order from an appellate court forbidding the court of the first instance to proceed further in the cause on the ground that cognizance of such cause does not belong to such court, or that it is not competent to decide it. Iberia; St. M. & E. R. Co. v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co., 56 South. 417, 129 La. 492.

The writ of "prohibition" is an order of the circuit court to an inferior court of limited jurisdiction, prohibiting it from proceeding in a matter out of its jurisdiction. Civ. Code Prac. § 479. If the inferior court has jurisdiction, the circuit court cannot grant a writ of prohibition to prevent the inferior court from deciding the case, although he may be of the opinion that it will decide it improperly. Hughes v. Holbrook (Ky.) 108 S. W. 225 (citing Scott v. Tully, 49 S. W. 1063, 106 Ky. 69); Thomas v. Davis (Ky.) 110 S. W. 408, 409.

The "writ of prohibition" will not issue to arrest the proceedings of an inferior tribunal, unless such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such tribunal, and there is no plain, speedy or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Johnston v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 87 Pac. 211, 212, 4 Cal. App. 90 (citing Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103; Works, Courts, § 81; Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 292; White v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 42 Pac. 471, 110 Cal. 58).

PROHIBITION DISTRICT

A "prohibition district," is defined by Local Option Act (Laws 1909, p. 18, § 28) to be any district or territory in which the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited by law, and while section 8, forbidding that existing licenses shall be affected by an election in favor of prohibition, may not render the district a prohibition district as to holders of unexpired licenses, yet it will be within the definition of section 28 as one who has no license. State v. Jordan, 112 Pac. 1049, 1050, 19 Idaho, 192.

For one, as occasion requires, to obstruct a sidewalk by a skid from his door to a delivery wagon for purposes of moving merchandise between them is not within an ordinance prohibiting one from constructing a "door, porch, window, fence, or other projection which shall project into a street." Gates & Son Co. v. City of Richmond, 49 S. E. 965, 103 Va. 702.

PROJECTOR

Under Const. art. 9, § 8, prohibiting the granting of a license to a foreign corporation to build a railroad within the state, and providing that, where a railroad is partly in the state, the owners or "projectors" thereof must incorporate in the state, the term "projectors" of a railroad not in existence, as distinguished from owners, are those who project, plan, or promote the prospective railroad or the corporation. 23 St. at Large, p. 1053, providing for the domestication of foreign railroad corporations, is invalid under such constitutional provision. Carolina, C. & O. Ry. v. McCown, 66 S. E. 418, 423, 84 S. C. 313.

PROLAPSUS

In an action for personal injuries, an instruction was not objectionable as calling special attention to "the pulling down sensation, or prolapsus of the womb," because there was no evidence of such sensation. Plaintiff's injury having resulted in prolapsus uteri, it was not necessary to prove the sensation; prolapsus being a pulling down of the womb. Saeger v. Wabash R. Co., 110 S. W. 686, 687, 131 Mo. App. 282.

PROLONGATION

The word "prolongation," as used in a deed, means a continued or extended line, though consisting of several angles, where such meaning would be consistent with the other words of description, rather than a direct line, which would render the next course in the deed inconsistent with the direction and monument by which it is described. Chapman v. Hamblet, 62 Atl. 215, 217, 100 Me. 454.

PROMISE

See Collateral Promise; Conditional Promise; Implied Promise; New Promise; Original Promise; Special Promise.

A "promise" is a solemn affirmation of intention as a present fact. When a promise is made with no intention of performing it, and for the very purpose of accomplishing a fraud, it is a most apt and effectual means to that end, and the victim has a remedy by action or defense. Hill v. Gettys, 47 S. E. 449, 450, 135 N. C. 373 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bigelow, Fraud, 484).

One desiring to purchase real estate stated to a real estate broker: "If you get hold of a piece of ground to sell, that is suitable for raising potatoes and onions, and for which I can put in the fair grounds as part pay, 'let me know,' and I will do what is right with you." Held, that the statement did not amount to more than a request to the broker to let the intended purchaser know in case the broker came across a suitable piece of land, and was insufficient to constitute a "promise" to accept land that might be offered by the broker. Pomeroy v. Wimer, 78 N. E. 233, 79 N. E. 443, 447, 167 Ind. 440.

The word "promised," standing by itself, without any modifying words, means a distinct, express, unambiguous, and unconditional promise. It means a declaration made by one person to another, for a good and valuable consideration, by which the promisor binds himself to do or forbear some act, and gives to the promisee a legal right to enforce a fulfillment. To promise is to agree. That, after a discharge in bankruptcy, one "promised" to pay a debt discharged in bankruptcy implied a distinct, express, and unconditional promise. Stern v. Bradner Smith & Co., 80 N. E. 307, 309, 225 Ill. 430, 116 Am. St. Rep. 151 (citing Cent. Dict.).

Undertaking distinguished

Where, in a suit to enforce a resulting trust, the complaint alleged that the property in controversy was conveyed to defendant on her promise and undertaking to redeliver the deed to plaintiff in the event of his recovery from an illness, etc., that plaintiff delivered the deed to defendant in trust only, defendant promising plaintiff at the time of such delivery, etc., such language did not necessarily mean an oral promise, since the term "promise" may be a contract, a pact, or an agreement, while the word "undertaking" is a stronger term and implies entering into a stipulation. Dennison v. Barney, 113 Pac. 519, 521, 49 Colo. 442.

PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR DEBT, DEFAULT, ETC.

See, also, Promise to Pay Debt of Another.

A promise by the owner of the equity of redemption to pay the mortgage note provided the mortgagee would not foreclose was not within Rev. Laws, c. 74, § 1, cl. 2, as a special "promise to answer for the debt, etc., of another." Manning v. Anthony, 84 N. E. 466, 208 Mass. 399, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179.

A parol statement by one person that he "would remit for cattle" purchased by another person was, in the absence of a showing of partnership or agency, a mere "promise" to answer for the debt of another, and hence within the statute of frauds (Ky. St. § 470, subsec. 4). Hillert v. Harned, 135 S. W. 764, 766, 143 Ky. 3.

An agreement to pay an account for another to prevent his prosecution is a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another within Civ. Code, 1895, § 2693, and must be in writing. Bush v. Roberts, 62 S. E. 92, 93, 4 Ga. App. 531.

Where a partnership, to enable one of the partners to borrow the money necessary to commence business, agreed that if the contemplated sureties would sign the note it should become and be a partnership debt, and the sureties signed and the firm obtained the money, its agreement to pay the debt was direct, and not collateral, and not within Rev. St. Colo. 1908, § 2668, requiring every special "promise to answer for the debt of another" to be in writing. Kelsey v. Munson, 198 Fed. 841, 842, 117 C. C. A. 483.

Where defendants agreed to pay a mortgage indebtedness on a drug store as a part of the consideration for the purchase of the stock and business, such agreement was an original undertaking, and not a "promise to answer for the debt of another," within the statute of frauds. Ubert v. Schonger, 129 N. Y. Supp. 545, 546, 144 App. Div. 696.

A "promise," although in form to pay the debt of another, and although its performance may incidentally have the effect to extinguish the liability, is not within the statute of frauds if the main purpose and object is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, involving either a benefit to himself or damage to the other contracting party. Rice v. Hardwick (N. M.) 124 Pac. 800, 801.

Where the benefit, legal or pecuniary, to the promisor is the inducement for the promise of indemnity, such promise is not within the statute of frauds, as being a special promise to answer for the debt or default of another, but is an original promise binding upon the promisor. McCormick v. Boylan, 78 Atl. 335, 336, 83 Conn. 686, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 882.

A parol promise by owner of realty to pay a subcontractor the amount due from the contractor who failed to pay, given in consideration of the subcontractor not filing a lien on the property, is an original promise to answer for one's own debt and not a promise to answer for the debt of another and is not within the statute of frauds. Wells & Morris v. Brown, 121 Pac. 828, 67 Wash. 351, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 317.

A promise by officers of a corporation, which had an interest in a certain building to answer for the purchase price of a quantity of lumber sold to the contractor corporation of the construction of the building, was a "promise" to answer for the debt of a third person, required by the statute of frauds to be in writing; and hence such promise, when oral, did not render the officers individually liable thereon. Roscoe Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1018, 1020, 124 App. Div. 539.

Where the first of two accommodation indorsers of a promissory note having indorsed, on the strength of a verbal agreement made by the second indorser, whereby the latter, in consideration that the maker of the note should place in his hands certain valuable personal property to secure payment of the note by the maker, promised the first indorser to indemnify him against loss thereon, and the maker having furnished the consideration before delivery of the note, and the first indorser having been obliged to pay the note to the holder, it was held, in an action by the first indorser against the second indorser for reimbursement under the agreement of indemnity, that this was not a "promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person," within the statute of frauds. Wilson v. Hendee, 66 Atl. 413, 416, 74 N. J. Law, 640.

PROMISE TO MORTGAGE.

Mortgage distinguished, see Mortgage.

PROMISE TO PAY

See Unconditional Promise to Pay; Sale. See, also, Promissory Note.

A "promise to pay" is not the equivalent of actual payment, and the entering into an agreement to receive proceeds is not tantamount to the actual receipt thereof. Christensen v. Beebe, 91 Pac. 129, 133, 32 Utah, 406.

To be a "promise in writing to pay money," within the 10-year limitation of Rev. St. 1899, § 4272, the writing must contain words either expressing a promise to pay, or from which it may be implied. Ball v. Peper Cotton Press Co., 121 S. W. 798, 802, 141 Mo. App. 26.

"It is a perversion of the word 'promise' to apply it to a declaration made to one who has no interest in or connection with the subject spoken of." An acknowledgment of a mortgage debt to an assessor for the purpose of assessment was not a 'promise to pay,' within the statute of limitations. President and Board of Trustees of California College v. Stephens, 105 Pac. 614, 615, 11 Cal. App. 523 (citing 1 Bouv. Inst. 339).

PROMISE TO PAY DEBT OF ANOTHER

See, also, Promise to Answer for Debt, Default, etc.

An oral "promise to pay" an existing debt of a third person, founded on a new consideration, is not within the statute of frauds, being an original and not a collateral promise. Zimmerman v. Holt, 144 S. W. 222, 223, 102 Ark. 407.

A parol promise of a buyer of mortgaged chattels to pay the mortgage debt, providing that the property shall not be sold without the mortgagee's consent, made in consideration of the mortgagee consenting to the sale, is not a "promise to pay the debt of another." Gay v. Schaefer, 100 Pac. 334, 335, 52 Wash. 269.

Where a creditor of a corporation agreed to release it from the whole debt on the payment of a part thereof if its president and a stockholder would individually assume the remainder, and that was done, the remainder of the debt became the president's obligation and a promise to pay his own debt, and not a "promise to pay the debt of another" within the statute of frauds. Beall v. Board of Trade of Kansas City, 148 S. W. 386, 388, 164 Mo. App. 186.

A promise by a stockholder that, if a seller to the corporation will forego his demand for immediate payment for goods delivered, and will continue to sell and deliver goods to the corporation, he will indemnify the seller from any loss on account of the extension of credit is a promise to pay a debt of the corporation, within the statute of frauds and, to be enforceable, it must be in writing. Goldie-Klenert Distributing Co. v. Bothwell, 121 Pac. 60, 67 Wash. 264, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 849.

An oral agreement by a partner to pay an order drawn by his copartner in favor of a creditor of the copartner individually, when a firm transaction is settled, unsupported by any consideration, is a "promise to pay the debt of another," within the statute of frauds and is not enforceable. Hill v. Wright, 139 S. W. 946, 144 Ky. 806.

Where plaintiff purchased a horse at auction, under a warranty, and returned the same on its proving unsound, an action by him against the auctioneer to recover the money paid as money had and received to plaintiff's use, was not an action on a contract "to pay the debt of another," within the statute of frauds. McClean v. Stansberry, 131 N. W. 15, 16, 151 Iowa, 812, 85 L. R. A. (N. S.) 481.

Where a purchaser of standing timber, who was indebted therefor to the owner, the latter holding a lien on the lumber for the price, transferred his right to cut and remove the lumber to a third person, who orally agreed, in order to obtain a release of the lien, to pay the price, or see that it was paid, and the owner because of the promise released his lien, the promise was not a "promise to pay the debt of another" within the statute of frauds. Rogers v. Gennett Lumber Co., 69 S. E. 788, 789, 154 N. C. 108.

Defendant, an attorney, having procured plaintiff to become surety on an injunction bond, placed in plaintiff's hands $200 to indemnify him against any possible loss. The injunction having been made perpetual before plaintiff had returned the deposit to defendant's client, plaintiff was summoned as garnishee on the claim that the money so deposited belonged to another. The garnishment was sustained, and defendant, to induce plaintiff not to pay the judgment out of the deposit, and to permit an appeal, promised that he would guarantee plaintiff against any loss above the amount so held. Held, that defendant's promise was an original undertaking, and not a "promise to pay the debt of another," within the statute of frauds. Dent v. Arthur, 137 S. W. 285, 286, 156 Mo. App. 472.

PROMISE TO SELL

See Sell.

PROMISSORY NOTE

See, also, Note.

A "promissory note" is a promise to pay. Beall v. Hudson County Water Co., 185 Fed. 179, 181.

A promissory note is a promise in writing to pay a specified sum at a time fixed therein. In re McGuire & Hanlein, 132 Fed. 394, 395.

A "promissory note" is defined to be an unconditional promise in writing for the payment of a certain sum of money absolutely. Bick v. Clark, 114 S. W. 1144, 184 Mo. App. 544.

A written instrument containing an unequivocal promise to pay a sum certain on a fixed day, and which recites that it was given for value, is a promissory note. Leczycki v. Kuczynski, 138 N. Y. Supp. 816, 817.

In order to constitute a "promissory note," the instrument must be for a specified sum or certain sum of money. Smith v. Myers, 69 N. E. 858, 860, 207 Ill. 126.

A "promissory note" is a promise in writing to pay to a person therein named a certain sum of money at a specific time. Digan v. Mandel, 79 N. E. 899, 902, 167 Ind. 586, 119 Am. St. Rep. 515.

A "promissory note" is a written engagement by one person to pay another absolutely and unconditionally a certain sum of money at a time specified therein. White v. Harris, 48 S. E. 41, 43, 69 S. C. 65, 104 Am. St. Rep. 791.

"Promissory notes, among our people, are regarded as securities for money, more or less valuable; indeed, in proportion as the pecuniary ability and credit of the makers of them are more or less reliable." Wagner v. Scherer, 85 N. Y. Supp. 894, 895, 89 App. Div. 202 (citing Jennings v. Davis, 31 Conn. 184).

An attested note in which the maker for value received unconditionally promises to pay to the payee or order a fixed sum at a fixed date is a "promissory note" within Rev. St. c. 83, § 89, declaring that the six-year limitation does not apply to actions on promissory notes signed in the presence of an attesting witness. Murray v. Quint, 66 Atl. 313, 314, 102 Me. 145.

A "promissory note" carries with it a presumption in the hands of the holder that it was made for a valuable consideration regularly indorsed for value before maturity and is truly dated. Sears v. Daly, 78 Pac. 5, 7, 43 Or. 846.

"A 'promissory note' is an unconditional promise in writing for the payment of a certain sum of money. It is an essential condition of a promissory note that there be no uncertainty as to the amount it calls for at any particular time. If the promise be to pay a stated sum plus or minus an indefinite amount, it is not a promissory note." An instrument in the general form of a promissory note, whereby the maker promises to pay a definite sum with exchange and collection charges is not a "promissory note." Smith v. First State Bank of Tyler, 104 N. W. 369, 95 Minn. 496 (citing Loring v. Anderson, 103 N. W. 722, 95 Minn. 101).

The essentials of a "promissory note" are that it be in writing, that it contain an expressed or implied promise to pay a certain sum absolutely and at all events, that the promise be unincumbered with collateral agreements, and that the instrument indicate with certainty the parties to the contract, so that an instrument, as follows, "Good for $1,000 for ten shares Kinloch Jockey Club stock, surrendered to the undersigned by the owner of said stock, and for which I am liable," is a promissory note, though not a negotiable one. Kessler v. Claves, 125 S. W. 799, 801, 147 Mo. App. 88.

A "promissory note" is an "absolute promise in writing, signed, but not sealed, to pay a certain specified sum at a time therein limited, or on demand, or at sight, to a person therein named or designated, or to his order or to the bearer." A writing reading: "Kingston, I. T., July 16th, 1903. On or before Oct. 1, 1904, I, we, or either of us promises to pay to the order of B. $150 at K., for value received. And in case of legal proceedings on this note, or the same placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, I, we, or either of us agree to pay 10 per cent. additional on the amount"—and signed by two persons, is a note. Harris v. Pate, 104 S. W. 812, 813, 7 Ind. T. 493.

An instrument as follows: "May 17, 1865. Deposited with me by David Luther, eight hundred dollars in cash, and three hundred dollars in Yorktown bonds, to be delivered on call. A. Crawford,"—held a promissory note. Luther v. Crawford, 116 Ill. App. 351, 352.

Negotiable instrument

Negotiable promissory note, see Negotiable Note.

A "promissory note" is something more than a mere general promise; it is a negotiable instrument recognized by the law merchant as property. Manning v. Berdan, 132 Fed. 382, 386.

The words "promissory note," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1906, § 3660, providing that days of grace shall be allowed for the payment of a "promissory note," defined in section 3698 as an instrument negotiable in form whereby the signer promises to pay a specified sum of money, include a note negotiable in form, notwithstanding the fact that it is rendered nonnegotiable because of subsequent provisions therein. Sullins v. Farmers' Exchange Bank, 87 Pac. 857, 858, 17 Okl. 419, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839.

Payment of money only

A trade check reading as follows: "We promise to pay bearer one dollar, two years after demand, in merchandise. [Signed] Gulf Lumber Co., by W. H. Vernon," and indorsed by the letters "A. D. M."—is a "promissory note" payable to bearer in merchandise within the statute against forgery of notes, since under Act No. 228, p. 345, of 1908, trade checks redeemable in merchandise are payable on demand in current money. State v. White, 52 South. 238, 126 La. 119.

Certificate of deposit

A certificate of deposit issued by a bank, certifying that the depositor has on deposit in the bank a stated sum of money, subject to his order, is the equivalent of a "promissory note," payable on demand. Lamar, Taylor & Riley Drug Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Albany, 56 S. E. 486, 487, 127 Ga. 448 (citing Lynch v. Goldsmith, 64 Ga. 42).

Township warrant

A township warrant is not a "promissory note" in any sense of the word. Mitchelltree School Tp. of Martin County v. Carnahan, 84 N. E. 520, 522, 42 Ind. App. 473.

PROMISSORY REPRESENTATION

"What has been called 'promissory representations' looking to the future as to what the vendee can do with the property, how much he can make on it, and in this case how much he can save by the use of it, are on a par with false affirmations and opinions as to the value of property, and do not generally constitute legal fraud." Williamson v. Holt, 61 S. E. 384, 386, 147 N. C. 515, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240 (citing and adopting Gordon v. Parmelee, 2 Allen [84 Mass.] 212; Long v. Woodman, 58 Me. 52; Benj. Sales [7th Ed.] 483 et seq.).

PROMISSORY WARRANTY

A "promissory warranty" has reference to something to be done or omitted in the future, and does not include that which exists at the time, or relates to the past, and it must embody an agreement to do or not to do something in the future; hence where no additional insurance was procured after a policy was issued, and the false representation or statement, if any was made, related to conditions existing at the time, it did not constitute a promissory warranty. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Wade (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1186, 1189.

Warranties in insurance law are of two kinds—affirmative and promissory. Affirmative warranties consist of a representation in the policy of a fact. Promissory warranties are those that require that something shall be done or not done after the policy takes effect. Rosenthal Clothing & Dry Goods Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 46 S. E. 1021, 55 W. Va. 238.

What is commonly known as the "iron-safe clause," in a policy of fire insurance, requiring the insured to "keep a set of books, which shall clearly and plainly present a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases, sales and shipments, both for cash and credit," is a promissory warranty. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 56 S. E. 643, 644, 127 Ga. 491, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667, 9 Ann. Cas. 461 (citing Southern Fire Ins. Co. v. Knight, 36 S. E. 821, 111 Ga. 628, 629, 52 L. R. A. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216; Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Stubbs, 27 S. E. 180, 98 Ga. 754).

Where a clause in a fire insurance policy provides that the "assured shall keep books of account correctly detailing purchases or sales of stock," and another clause in effect provides that failure to observe such condition shall work a forfeiture of all claims under the policy, such clause requiring the assured to keep books of account is a "promissory warranty" on his part. Where a clause in a policy of fire insurance provides that the insured as often as required shall produce for examination all books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers or certified copies thereof, if the original be lost at such reasonable place as may be designated by the insurance company or its representative and shall permit extracts and copies thereof to be made," and another clause in effect provides that no suit or action on the policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustained in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the insured with the foregoing requirement, the clause requiring the insured to produce the books is a "promissory warranty" on his part and a condition precedent to his right of recovery on the policy. Tucker v. Colonial Fire Ins. Co., 51 S. E. 86, 90, 53 W. Va. 30.

Corporation

Persons who plan and organize a corporation are "promoters." Hinkley v. Sac Oil & Pipe Line Co., 107 N. W. 629, 631, 132 Iowa, 396, 119 Am. St. Rep. 564.

A "promoter" of a corporation is one who brings about its incorporation and organization, and he is its agent and occupies a fiduciary relation toward it. Richlands Oil Co. v. Morriss, 61 S. E. 762, 764, 108 Va. 288.

"Cook on the Law of Stock and Stockholders defines a 'promoter' to be a 'person who brings about the incorporation and organization of a corporation.' He brings together the persons who are interested in the enterprise, aids in procuring subscriptions, generally is the representative of parties who wish to sell property to the corporation or to construct its works." Hutchinson v. Simpson, 37 N. Y. Supp. 369, 376, 92 App. Div. 382.

A "promoter" is one who brings together the persons who are to become interested in the enterprise, aids in promoting or procuring the subscriptions, and sets in motion the machinery which leads to the formation of the corporation itself. See v. Heppenheimer, 61 Atl. 843, 857, 69 N. J. Eq. 36 (quoting Cook, Stock & Stockh.).

A "promoter" is a person who brings about the incorporation and organization of a corporation and who brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise and who aids in procuring subscriptions and sets in motion the machinery which leads to the formation of the corporation. Cox v. National Coal & Oil Inv. Co., 56 S. E. 494, 500, 61 W. Va. 291.

A "promoter" has been defined to be one who brings about the incorporation and organization of a company; who brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise; who aids in procuring subscriptions, and sets in motion the machinery which leads to the formation of the corporation itself. It is said to be a business, not a legal, term. A "promoter" is in the situation akin to that of agent or trustee of the company; and his dealings with it must be open and fair. The Telegraph v. Loetscher, 101 N. W. 773, 774, 127 Iowa, 383, 4 Ann. Cas. 667 (citing 2 Cook, Stockh. § 651).

"The term 'promoter' is a term not of law but of business. A promoter is one who seeks opportunities for making advantageous purchases and profitable investments in industrial or other enterprises, who interests men of means in such a project, when found organizes them in a corporation for the purpose of 'taking over' the project, and attends upon the newly formed company until it is fully launched in business. He may be stockholder, director, officer, or none of these. His services begin before the company is formed, and ordinarily are not concluded until some time after its formation." Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co., 71 Atl. 153, 171, 172, 74 N. J. Eq. 457.

The rule that a "promoter" of a corporation stands in a fiduciary relation to the corporation, charged with the duty of good faith, as in cases of other trusts, so that he cannot lawfully make a secret profit in a transaction with the corporation, and must account for such profit if made, includes one who undertakes to form a corporation and to procure for it the rights, instrumentalities, and capital by which it is to carry out the purposes of the incorporation, and to establish it as able to do its business, and his work may begin long before the organization of the corporation, and may continue after the incorporation by attracting the investment of capital in its securities. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314.

A "promoter" is "a person who takes such preliminary steps in the formation of a corporation as to bring himself into a fiduciary relation thereto, analogous to that of trustee and cestui que trust." A promoter is "a person who brings about the incorporation and organization of a corporation. He brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise, aids in procuring subscriptions, and sets in motion the machinery which leads to the formation of the corporation itself." Where there was no evidence that a person helped organize a corporation, there was nothing to show that he was a "promoter." South Missouri Pine Lumber Co. v. Crommer, 101 S. W. 22, 26, 202 Mo. 504 (quoting and adopting definition in Cook, Stock & Stock § 631).

A "promoter" is one who brings together the persons who become interested in the enterprise, aids in procuring subscriptions, and sets in motion the machinery which leads to the formation of the corporation itself. The term involves the idea of exertion for the purpose of getting up and starting a company, and also the idea of some duty towards the company imposed by or arising from the position which the so-called promoter assumes towards it. It is a term of business, and not of law, usefully summing up, in a single word, a number of business operations familiar to the commercial world by which the company is brought into existence. The term does not imply that the promoters are brought into the corporation itself, nor have promoters necessarily aught to do with the payment in of the capital or cash of the corporation. Armstrong v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 122 N. Y. Supp. 531, 533, 137 App. Div. 828.

PROMOTION

The term "promotion" is defined as an advancement, or the act of exalting in rank or honor (Webst. Dict.); and as advancement to a higher position, grade, class, or rank; preferment in honor or dignity (Standard Dict.). Const. art. 5, § 9, requires promotions in the civil service to be made according to the merits, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examination; and Laws 1899, p. 795, c. 370, passed in pursuance thereof, provides that telegraph operators in the city of New York shall rank as sergeants of police, and that the selection of captains shall be made from the list of sergeants. Held, that the designation of a patrolman as telegraph operator by the chief of police, intended to be permanent, was a promotion, and, being made without an examination, was without effect. People ex rel. Campbell v. Partridge, 85 N. Y. Supp. 853, 854, 80 App. Div. 497.

A "promotion" is an advancement to a higher position, an elevation, a preferment. Const. 1894, art. 5, § 9, providing that appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state and the civil divisions thereof shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as practicable by competitive examinations, contemplates that all appointments and promotions shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained by competitive examinations, unless it is in good faith found that it is impracticable so to determine the relative merit and fitness of persons for a particular position, and any statute or rule contrary to the provision is void. Hale v. Worstell, 77 N. E. 1177-1179, 185 N. Y. 247, 113 Am. St. Rep. 895.

Though not accompanied by any change in character of work, an increase of compensation of a clerk in the bureau of assessments and arrears is a "promotion," within the meaning of the Constitution directing that civil service promotions shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained by competitive examinations. In re Dryer, 102 N. Y. Supp. 922, 923, 52 Misc. Rep. 612.

An increase, from $2,000 to $2,400, of the annual salary of an assistant engineer to the board of water supply of New York City, attempted to be made by such board, constituted a "promotion," in violation of Civil Service Law, § 16; it appearing that the board intended a promotion from one grade to another, and did not exercise its power under Laws 1905, c. 724, to fix his compensation. People ex rel. Holleran v. Creelman, 132 N. Y. Supp. 176, 177, 148 App. Div. 121.

Const. art. 5, § 9, requires appointments and promotions in the civil service to be made according to merit and fitness to be ascertained as far as practicable by competitive examinations. Civil Service Law, Laws 1899, p. 795, c. 370, § 15, requires vacancies in positions in the competitive classes to be filled as far as practicable by "promotion," and promotions to be based on merit, and defines an increase of salary as a "promotion." New York Charter, § 290 (Laws 1897, p. 90, c. 378), as amended by Laws 1901, p. 122, c. 408, requires the police commissioners to maintain a central office bureau of detectives and to select persons to perform detective duty therefrom from the patrolman or roundsmen, and provides that the persons so selected shall be known as "detective sergeants" and shall receive the same pay as other sergeants of police. Section 299 of the charter (Laws 1901, p. 125, c. 466) limits the salary of a roundsman to $1,500 a year and fixes the salary of a detective sergeant at $2,000. Held, that a roundsman appointed to the central office bureau of detectives is promoted, within the meaning of the constitutional requirement of competitive examinations, and, when appointed after the classification of the position of detective sergeant in the competitive schedule by resolution of the municipal civil service commission, must be appointed pursuant to a civil service examination. People ex rel. Gilhooly v. McAdoo, 95 N. Y. Supp. 400, 402, 108 App. Div. 1.

PROMOTION STOCK

As used in Act March 5, 1909, regulating the issuance by mining corporations of treasury and promotion stock, and requiring the stamping of certificates therefor, the words "treasury stock" mean stock set aside for the actual development of the property, while "promotion stock" is that issued to those who may originally own the mining ground or valuable rights connected therewith in consideration of their deeding the same to the mining company, or such stock as is issued to promoters for incorporating the company. State ex rel. Moore v. Manhattan Verde Co., 109 Pac. 442, 443, 32 Nev. 474.

PROMPT

By usage of the Boston grain trade, the phrase "to be shipped prompt" means to be shipped within 10 days. Soper v. Tyler, 58 Atl. 699, 700, 77 Conn. 104.

A policy of insurance on a canal boat provided that, "in case of any loss or misfortune" to the vessel, "prompt notice of the disaster" should be given to the insurer, and that a failure to give such notice should relieve it from any liability therefor. Held, that notice given nearly a month after the boat sank was not "prompt" within such requirement and avoided the policy; no reason appearing why the owner could not have given such notice at once. Whalen v. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto, 185 Fed. 490, 492, 107 C. C. A. 590.

PROMPTLY

The requirement in a surety bond that notice of default or loss should be given the surety "promptly and immediately" means only that it shall be given within a reasonable time after default. Bacigalupi v. Phoenix Bldg. & Const. Co., 112 Pac. 892, 895, 14 Cal. App. 632.

The words "promptly and without delay," used to define a carrier's duty with reference to the transportation of goods, mean "with reasonable promptness, and without unreasonable delay." Burlingame v. Adams Exp. Co., 171 Fed. 902, 904.

Under a contract to ship "promptly," the word "promptly" means nothing more nor less than reasonable time; the term being a relative one, and its meaning dependent upon the circumstances. McCleskey & Whitman v. Howell Cotton Co., 42 South. 67, 70, 147 Ala. 578.

Where a contract for the sale of land and a prior agreement to refund the monthly installments paid in case the purchaser became dissatisfied at the end of six months were a part of the same transaction, payments made by him within the 60 days allowed by the contract of sale were "promptly" made as required by a condition of the agreement to refund. Livieratos v. Commonwealth Security Co., 106 Pac. 1125, 1126, 57 Wash. 376.

As assignment, dated November 11, 1909, of sufficient money due the assignor to discharge a loan made that day by the assignee to the assignor, if the loan should not be "promptly" repaid, entitled the assignee to the amount assigned, as against the assignor's administratrix, where the debt remained unpaid July 22, 1911. Just's Adm'x v. Woodman, 144 S. W. 379, 380, 147 Ky. 493.

Where by plaintiff's contract it was to "promptly" forward information to defendant, its prayer, merely requiring it to be found that its information was "regularly" forwarded, was defective; "regularly" being generally understood as meaning merely in compliance with some prescribed or adopted rule or order, without regard to the idea of absence of unnecessary delay embodied in "promptly." F. W. Dodge Co. v. H. A. Hughes Co., 72 Atl. 1036, 1039, 110 Md. 374.

Act June 7, 1901, § 1 (P. L. 514), relating to street railroads, requires that the consent of the local authorities for the right to occupy the street shall be "promptly" applied for and shall have been obtained within two years from the date of the charter. Held, that the limit of time permissible under the word "promptly" could not be exactly determined. Prima facie any application long enough beforehand to afford opportunity to the municipality to consider and act upon it within two years would comply with the statute. But, on the other hand, the intent of the statute is to hurry the work, "and the courts are at liberty at all times to inquire into the delay for the purpose of ascertaining whether the intention is to make an effort in good faith to get consent, or merely to shut out rival competitors as long as possible." Nanticoke Suburban St. Ry. Co. v. People's St. R. Co. of Nanticoke & Newport, 61 Atl. 997, 998, 212 Pa. 395.

The word "promptly," as used in an offer which states that it is subject to "prompt" acceptance by wire, means more expedition than reasonable time. Where defendants wired plaintiff an offer for a car load of eggs, subject to "prompt" acceptance by wire, plaintiff did not have a "reasonable" time in which to accept, and defendants were not bound by an acceptance wired after 2 o'clock p. m. and received by defendants at 3:30; the defendant's telegram having been delivered at plaintiff's office at 10 o'clock a. m., though he did not receive it until 11:30, and wrote his acceptance about 12 o'clock; the further delay in the transmission of the acceptance being caused by the operator's absence from the office from about 12 o'clock until after 1 o'clock, about which time plaintiff went to dinner, after which he filed the telegram. Brewer v. Lepman & Heggie, 106 S. W. 1107, 1108, 127 Mo. App. 693.

PROMPTNESS

In an action against a carrier for damages arising from delay in the transportation of a shipment, the word "promptness," in an instruction "that it is the duty of a common carrier to exercise ordinary diligence to transport and deliver with promptness goods and freight delivered to it for transportation for hire," required only the exercise of ordinary diligence to transport and deliver the shipment; a degree of care which is proper to require at the hands of the carrier. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Foster (Tex.) 86 S. W. 44.

PROMULGATE

In Act Cong. March 3, 1905, c. 1496, § 3, 33 Stat. 1265, requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to "make" and "promulgate" rules governing the inspection, delivery, and shipment of cattle from a quarantined state into any other state, and section 1 requiring publication of notice of quarantine and the giving of notice to the proper officers of carriers doing business in any quarantined state, the words "make" and "promulgate" are not synonymous, and the duty to "make" rules was sufficiently accomplished by writing them and signing them officially, but to "promulgate" them required the giving notice thereof to the officers of carriers, etc., and their publication in the selected newspapers within the affected district. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 165 Fed. 936, 939.

PROOF

See Additional Proof; Affirmative Proof; Burden of Proof; Conclusive Proof; Failure of Proof; On the Like Proof; Satisfactory Proof; Strict Proof. Indubitable proof, see Indubitable. Other proof, see Other.

What circumstances will amount to "proof" cannot be a matter of general definition; the legal test being the sufficiency of the evidence to satisfy the understanding and conscience of the jury. Clarke v. Koep- pel, 104 N. Y. Supp. 65, 67, 119 App. Div. 458 (quoting Starkie, Ev. p. 865).

"Proof," when used in a statute, means evidence which is competent under the general rules of evidence, so that under a statute forbidding the issuance of a capias ad respondendum in tort actions, unless the proof establishes special cause for holding defendant to bail, hearsay evidence embodied in an affidavit could not be considered. Huf-ty v. Wilson, 74 Atl. 137, 138, 78 N. J. Law, 241.

An unverified petition is not proof within Code Civ. Proc. § 2091, providing that a writ of prohibition may be granted "on an affidavit or other written proof, showing a proper case therefor." In re Fenton, 109 N. Y. Supp. 321, 322, 58 Misc. Rep. 303.

A petition in an action on a fire policy stipulating that the amount of the loss shall be due 60 days after ascertainment thereof, which alleges that the property was destroyed by fire on April 28th, that on May 20th plaintiff gave defendant notice and proof of the fire and loss and demanded payment, sufficiently shows, after verdict, ascertainment of the loss 60 days before the institution of the suit, which was instituted more than 60 days after May 20th, the word "proof" meaning the degree of evidence which convinces the mind of any truth or fact and produces belief. Wicecarver v. Mercantile Town Mut. Ins. Co., 117 S. W. 698, 702, 137 Mo. App. 247.

Under a statute providing that wills shall be proved by oaths or affirmations of two or more competent witnesses, no subscribing witnesses were necessary; "proof" of the testator's signature by witnesses acquainted with his handwriting being sufficient. But under a statute providing that no property shall be bequeathed to any person in trust for religious or charitable use except by deed or will attested by two credible witnesses, an attesting witness must be a subscribing witness. In re Paxon's Estate, 70 Atl. 280, 282, 221 Pa. 98.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2620, providing that if all the subscribing witnesses to a written will are dead, the will may be established upon proof of the handwriting of testator and all the subscribing witnesses and also of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will upon the trial of an action, uses the word "proof" in the ordinary legal meaning, and hence does not require direct evidence as to the fact itself, but allows the establishment of the fact by inference or legal presumptions from other established facts. In re Abel's Will, 121 N. Y. Supp. 452, 454, 136 App. Div. 788.

The "proof" of majority, or consent of parents or tutor in case of minority, required by Civ. Code, arts. 97, 98, to be furnished by one demanding permission to marry, does not mean competent and legal evidence or testimony conforming to the fundamental rules of proof, one of which excludes hearsay testimony. It is not the duty of the clerk to administer an oath in every case to parties applying for a license, or require them to produce a written act of consent signed by the parents or tutor. It depends on circumstances, and appearance as to age might justify him in acting thereon. When a clerk of court does not know and has never seen the intended wife, and there is nothing in the particular case calculated to arouse his suspicions as to her being a minor, he is not guilty of negligence and failure of official duty, and liable in damages, for granting a license, relying upon the truthfulness of statements made to him by the intended husband and the friend accompanying him, who signed as surety on the bond, required to be given under article 101, that the parties were of age, and everything was right. Barnidge v. Kilpatrick, 35 South. 757, 758, 111 La. 587.

Under Const. § 106, declaring that, with certain exceptions, no special, private, or local law shall be passed unless notice of intention to apply therefor shall have been published, which notice shall state the substance of the proposed law, and that proof by affidavit that notice has been given shall be exhibited to each house of the Legislature, the journals of which must affirmatively show that the bill has passed in accordance with this provision, a mere affidavit of the publisher of a newspaper that a notice containing the substance of a local act was published in his paper, but not setting forth the contents of the notice, stated only a conclusion of the affiant that the notice contained the substance of the proposed law, and was not sufficient proof on that point. The word "proof," when used in a legislative enactment, means competent and legal evidence or testimony that conforms to the rules of evidence, one of which excludes hearsay evidence, however trustworthy the informant, or however implicit may be the deponent's belief in the truth of what he has heard. State ex rel. Frederick v. Brodie, 41 South. 180, 181, 148 Ala. 381 (citing Inglis v. Schreiner, 32 Atl. 131, 58 N. J. Law, 120).

Evidence distinguished

"Proof" is the legal effect of evidence. United States v. Lee Huen, 118 Fed. 442, 456.

"Proof" is the effect of evidence, rather than the medium by which a fact is established. Lone Star Brewing Co. v. Willie, 114 S. W. 186, 192, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 550.

"Technically there is a difference between 'evidence' and 'proof.' Evidence tends to establish or disprove an alleged matter of fact in issue. Proof is an effect of evidence, while evidence is merely the means of making proof. A fact is not proved until it is established." Oliveros v. State, 47 S. E. 627, 629, 120 Ga. 237, 1 Ann. Cas. 114.

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2316, provides that no order of dismissal on the grounds of variance between the information and the proof shall bar another prosecution for the same offense. Held, that while the words "proof" and "evidence" were not synonymous, evidence being the medium through which proof is established and proof the effect of evidence rather than the evidence itself, the word "proof" as used in the statute was loosely used in the sense of evidence; and hence it was not essential to the application of the section that evidence should have been actually introduced at the trial and a variance so established in order that a dismissal because of variance should be relieved of its effect as former jeopardy. State v. Poole, 116 Pac. 468, 469, 64 Wash. 47.

As notice

An insurance policy provided that immediate notice must be given of any accident and injury for which a claim is to be made, with full particulars thereof, and other affirmative proof of death, or loss of limb or of sight, or of duration of disability, must also be furnished within two months from time of death or loss of limb," etc. Held, that a complaint alleging no notice of the accident until immediately after death was sufficient, since it must be conceded that "proof of the death and the causes thereof" include notice of the death and the causes thereof. Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Brown, 60 S. W. 915, 918, 4 Ind. T. 397.

PROOF BEYOND A REASONABLE DOUBT

See Reasonable Doubt.

PROOF BY A PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE

See Preponderance.

PROOF OF CLAIM

A "proof of claim" is defined by the bankruptcy act as "a statement under oath in writing signed by a creditor." It is an affirmative personal paper writing made by the creditor as distinguished from any admission of the bankrupt or secondary evidence from other sources. In re Strobel, 163 Fed. 787.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, subd. "a" (30 Stat. 562), provides that debts founded on an implied contract may be proved and allowed, and subdivision "b" declares that unliquidated claims may, pursuant to application to the court, be liquidated in such manner as it shall direct, and may thereafter be proved and allowed against the bankrupt's estate. Section 57, subd. "a" (30 Stat. 560), declares that proof of claims shall consist of a statement under oath, in writing signed by a creditor setting forth the claim, the consideration, and that the sum is justly owing from the bankrupt to the creditor. Subdivision "c" declares that claims, after being proved, may, for the purpose of allowance, be filed by the claimants, and subdivision "d" that proved claims shall be allowed on presentations to the court, unless objection is made. Subdivision "f" makes the determination of objections dependent on the convenience of the court and the best interests of the estate and the claimants, and subdivision "n" (30 Stat. 561) declares that claims shall not be proved subsequent to one year after the adjudication, or if they are liquidated by litigation, and the final judgment therein is rendered within 30 days before or after the expiration of such time, then within 60 days after the rendition of such judgment. Held, that the "proof" and the "allowance" of claims are separate and distinct steps, and that where a written statement of claim, duly verified, is filed with the referee within the year, such filing is sufficient to take the claim out of the statutory limitation, and it may be allowed, or liquidated and allowed thereafter. In re J. M. Mertens & Co., 147 Fed. 177, 180, 77 C. C. A. 473.

PROOF OF LOSS

A clause in an insurance policy requiring insured to make within 60 days after the fire a complete inventory, etc., is commonly called the "proof of loss." Greenwich Ins. Co. v. State, 84 S. W. 1025, 1028, 74 Ark. 72.

PROOF SPIRIT

"Proof spirit," or, as it is commonly called "hundred-proof" liquor, the United States government's basis for revenue tax, is defined by the Standard Dictionary to be an "alcoholic liquor that contains half its volume of alcohol." Very little whisky is hundred proof. Most of it, especially the cheaper grades, runs from seventy, and even lower, to ninety proof; that is to say, contains 35 to 45 per cent. alcohol. Commercial alcohol itself is only 188 proof. Beers and wines usually contain only 4 to 10 per cent. of alcohol." Mason v. State, 58 S. E. 139, 140, 1 Ga. App. 534.

PROPELLED

In a claim for a patent of an apparatus for reproducing sound consisting of a stylus shaped for engagement with a record and free to be vibrated and propelled by said record, the term "propelled" is the equivalent of "progressively fed." Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Duplex Phonograph Co., 177 Fed. 248, 249, 255.

PROPENSITY

Vicious propensity, see Vicious.

PROPER

See As She Thinks Proper; Necessary and Proper; Pay Proper; Right and Proper.

The word "proper" means fit, suitable, and appropriate. Kirchoff v. Hohnsbehn Creamery Supply Co., 123 N. W. 210, 212, 148 Iowa, 508; Miller v. Cedar Rapids Sash & Door Co., 134 N. W. 411, 153 Iowa, 735.

The word "proper" is necessarily a relative term, but may be definite and specific when used in connection with a definite subject-matter. State v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 96 N. E. 340, 343, 177 Ind. 553.

PROPER ACCOMMODATION

It is the duty of a carrier of passengers to provide fit and suitable accommodations for all the passengers that it receives and attempts to transport, and "proper accommodations" means seats such as are usually provided and in use in a vehicle intended for the transportation of passengers. Lane v. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co., 91 Pac. 883-886, 19 Okl. 324.

PROPER ACTION

In Laws 1899, p. 407, c. 245, authorizing the trustees of a county asylum "to commence and prosecute in the name of the county any 'proper action' or actions to collect any claim to the county in connection with the affairs of the asylum," refers to an ordinary action under the Code. Richardson v. Stuesser, 103 N. W. 261, 263, 125 Wis. 66, 69 L. R. A. 829, 4 Ann. Cas. 784.

PROPER AND LAWFUL AUTHORITY

The expression "proper and lawful authority," in a contract provided that a line dividing certain properties should remain stationary until decided by proper and lawful authority, could only refer to a court of law in the absence of any express designation of any other tribunal. Bishop v. Babcock, 22 Vt. 295, 299.

PROPER AND LEGAL EXPENSES

Under a statute (St. 1864, p. 402) providing that the trustees of any corporation formed under the laws of California shall have power to levy and collect, for the purpose of paying the "proper and legal expenses" of such corporation, assessments on the capital stock, etc., it was held that the debts of a corporation incurred in the transaction of its legitimate business are included among its "proper and legal expenses." Sullivan v. Triunfo Gold & Silver Min. Co., 29 Cal. 585, 588.

PROPER AND NECESSARY

Ky. St. § 567, provides that no corporation shall hold or own real estate not proper and necessary for its legitimate business for more than five years under penalty of escheat. Held that, if a corporation acquires land "proper and necessary" when acquired or at any time within five years after, its future use and availability may be considered in determining whether the quantity acquired and the time of bringing it into actual use make it proper and necessary for carrying on the legitimate business of the corporation, and it is not necessary to the validity of the holding that the land be immediately "used" by the corporation. Commonwealth v. Louisville Property Co., 132 S. W. 413, 414, 139 Ky. 689.

PROPER BELT SHIFTER

The term "proper belt shifters," as used in Laws 1903, p. 40, c. 37, § 1, providing that any corporation, operating a factory or mill, shall provide "proper belt shifters," or other mechanical contrivances for throwing on or off belts on pulleys, does not merely mean belt shifters in proper or necessary places, but rather sufficient belt shifters or other mechanical contrivances to effect the throwing on or off of belts on pulleys. There is no classification of pulleys or places as to the matter of necessity or practicability, and it was the manifest theory of the lawmakers that, when belts have been placed upon any pulleys for the purpose of operating machinery, the necessity for removing and replacing them will at some time arise, and that, in order to guard against danger from an attempt to shift them while in operation, some effective contrivance must be maintained for that purpose. Whelan v. Washington Lumber Co., 83 Pac. 98, 99, 41 Wash. 153, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1006.

PROPER BURIAL

The determination as to how a corpse shall be dressed for burial and the quality of the coffin and the box in which it is to be placed, as well as the depth of the grave, are matters for those who have the burial in charge, so that what is a "decent," "proper," or "respectable" burial will vary with the financial or social standing of the deceased and his relatives, the customs of the community, and the rules of religious, social, and political organizations to which he may have belonged. Seaton v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 871, 872, 149 Ky. 498, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211.

PROPER CARE

"Proper care," the failure to exercise which constitutes negligence, is that degree of care which a prudent man should use under like circumstances and charged with like duty. Ramsbottom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 50 S. E. 448, 449, 138 N. C. 38.

In a suit for injury to a passenger, a charge to find for defendant if it had exercised "proper care" to keep the appliances in reasonably good repair and condition does not impose too high a degree of care upon defendant. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Flood, 79 S. W. 1106, 1108, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 197.

In an action against a railroad for injuries to a passenger, where the court had properly defined in its charge the degree of care required of the railroad as that high degree of care which would be exercised by very cautious, competent, and prudent persons under the circumstances, a subsequent charge to find for defendant if it had exercised "proper care" to keep its appliances in good repair and its servants exercised "proper care" in handling its engine was not prejudicially erroneous to defendant in failing to define what would constitute proper care. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Parks, 90 S. W. 343, 345, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 480.

PROPER CASE

In determining that certain rights might be enforced in a "proper" case, the court defined the word "proper" as a case over which the court had jurisdiction. Larabee v. Dolley, 175 Fed. 365, 386.

To constitute due "process of law" within the federal Constitution and a "proper case" within Code Civ. Proc. § 854, providing for the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum "in a proper case," it must appear that the books and papers sought for have some materiality or relevancy to the matter under consideration, since no inquisitorial officer should be permitted, of his own volition, and arbitrarily, to compel a person to produce books and papers of a private and confidential character. In re Foster, 124 N. Y. Supp. 667, 675, 139 App. Div. 769.

Code Civ. Proc. § 269, providing that the official reporter must, if directed by the court, or requested by either party, within such reasonable time after the trial of a case as the court may designate, transcribe, in longhand or by typewriter, the testimony taken on the trial, or such portions thereof as may be requested, and when directed by the court file the same with the clerk, duly certified, contemplates that in a proper case the trial court, when called upon, will designate the "reasonable time" within which the phonographic reporter shall file the transcription of his notes. A "proper case" is one where it has become the duty of the phonographic reporter to make the transcription and where, for the orderly and expeditious procedure of the case, the court is appealed to to designate the time within which the phonographic reporter shall perform his duty. If the case be one where the shorthand reporter is not called upon to make a transcript, it is not one which calls for a declaration of time upon the part of the court. Richards v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 78 Pac. 244, 145 Cal. 38.

PROPER CASH ITEM

"Proper cash items" in a cashier's accounts ordinarily include not only money on hand, but everything for which he has paid out the association's cash during a particular day or business period. United States v. Young, 128 Fed. 111, 114.

PROPER CAUSE

See On Proper Cause Shown.

PROPER CLERK

The term "proper clerk," as used in Code 1860, c. 121, § 7, providing that where the acknowledgment of the conveyance of a married woman "shall have been delivered to the proper clerk and admitted to record, as to the husband as well as the wife, such writing shall operate to convey from the wife her right of dower," means any clerk who has the right and whose duty it is to record the deed when delivered to him for that purpose. Tarrant v. Core, 56 S. E. 228, 230, 106 Va. 161.

PROPER CONDITION

In a railway servant's action for injuries, wherein the court instructed that if the jury believed that, had the braking apparatus of the car been in proper condition, plaintiff could have set the brake and avoided the injury, and that in permitting such apparatus to become or to remain in the condition in which the jury should find the same to have been, etc., defendant was guilty of negligence, etc., the error, if any, in using the expression "proper condition," thereby leaving the jury to determine what was the proper condition, was cured by a following paragraph of the charge defining "proper condition" as such condition that it was able to perform its ordinary functions of setting the brake when used in the customary manner in which the same is used under similar circumstances, etc. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Neaves (Tex.) 127 S. W. 1090, 1092.

PROPER CONSIDERATION

Where an option to purchase realty for $950 recited a consideration of $1, that sum, if actually advanced, would be merely nominal, and would not alone constitute the "proper" or "fair" consideration required for such an option. Rude v. Levy, 96 Pac. 560, 561, 43 Colo. 482, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 91, 127 Am. St. Rep. 123.

PROPER COUNTY

The words "proper," "properly," and "efficient" are not necessarily relative terms, but may be definite and specific when used in connection with a definite subject-matter, as, for example, the "proper" county, used in connection with other statutes as to the county in which a suit is brought, where a specific statute fixes the proper county. State v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 96 N. E. 340, 343, 177 Ind. 553.

"A proper county," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 102, and Laws 1905, c. 82, relating to venue and change of venue in civil cases, means the place of trial prescribed by the statute, independent of any question of convenience of witnesses, or waiver or consent of parties and the county which, under the statute may lawfully be designated in the complaint when it is filed. Ivanusch v. Great Northern R. Co., 128 N. W. 333, 334, 26 S. D. 158.

Under St. 1909, p. 709, § 27, providing that the Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal or the superior court of the proper county may entertain a primary election contest, by "proper county" is meant the county in which the election is held. In re Snyder, 110 Pac. 820, 158 Cal. 218.

Under a statute providing that any inhabitant of this state, or any husband and wife jointly, may petition the superior court of "their proper county" for leave to adopt a child, the phrase "their proper county" means the county in which petitioners reside, and precludes the idea that a nonresident may petition under the statute. Knight v. Galloway, 85 Pac. 21, 22, 42 Wash. 413.

PROPER COURT

Under Rev. Codes, § 5468, requiring suit on a claim rejected by an administrator to be brought in the proper court, the court that has jurisdiction under the Constitution and laws to determine a civil suit for recovery of the debt sued on is the "proper court," and, if the amount claimed is within jurisdiction of the justice's or probate court, action may be brought therein; otherwise in the proper district court. Idaho Trust Co. v. Miller, 102 Pac. 360, 361, 16 Idaho, 308.

PROPER DEED

The term "proper deed," in a contract to convey land described and requiring the vendor to execute and deliver a "proper deed," means a deed which will convey a marketable title, which is one that is free from reasonable doubt. Where a contract to convey land described therein as the most southerly 20 acres of a tract described required the vendor to execute and deliver a proper deed, with the usual covenants conveying the property in fee simple free from all incumbrances, except, etc., and it was thereafter agreed that the 20 acres should be surveyed, which was never done, but it was discovered that it carried across a street of which both parties had notice and deprived the vendor's remaining property along such street of frontage thereon, whereupon she tendered a deed in the language of the contract. Such deed required a judicial construction to identify the premises conveyed, and was therefore not a "proper deed," as required by the contract. Wadick v. Mace, 103 N. Y. Supp. 899, 898, 118 App. Div. 777.

PROPER DISTRICT

The term "proper district" for purposes of removal of a case is that within which the defendant is sued in the court of a state, and the "proper district" for original actions is the "district" of the residence of either the plaintiff or defendant. Manufacturers' Commercial Co. v. Brown Alaska Co., 148 Fed. 308, 312.

Within Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 1, 24 Stat. 552, as amended by 25 Stat. 433, giving the United States Circuit Courts original cognizance concurrent with the courts of the several states in all civil suits where the matter in dispute exceeds $2,000, and section 2, providing that any suit of a civil nature of which the Circuit Courts have original jurisdiction may be removed from the state court into the Circuit Court for the "proper district" by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state, the "proper district" to which a suit may be removed from a state court must be a district where one of the parties resides, and, secondly, that, in view of the fact that the removal can be obtained only by "the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state; the 'proper district' is that in which the plaintiff resides." An action pending in a Delaware court of competent jurisdiction, brought by a citizen of Pennsylvania against a citizen and resident of New Jersey to recover a sum in excess of $2,000, is not removable to the United States Circuit Court for Delaware. Hill v. Woodland Amusement Co., 158 Fed. 530, 533, 534.

PROPER GUARD

An employer who is required by statute to provide a proper guard, and who in good faith endeavors to comply with the statute by providing a guard approved by experienced men, is entitled to interpose the defense of assumption of risk; the mere fact that the guard did not prevent the injury which some other kind of guard would have done not proving that the guard furnished was not a "proper guard." Johnston v. Northern Lumber Co., 84 Pac. 627, 628, 42 Wash. 230.

PROPER INDEPENDENT ADVICE

See Independent Advice.

PROPER JUDGMENT

A mandate of the Supreme Court, on remanding a case, to "render the proper judgment for the plaintiff," only authorizes the proper judgment on the special verdict in the case; no further trial being contemplated. Stahl v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 68 N. W. 954, 955, 94 Wis. 315.

PROPER OFFICER

The street commissioner, directed by ordinance to make an estimate of the cost of a sidewalk, is a "proper officer," within Rev. St. 1899, § 5985, providing that, before the aldermen shall make a contract for building a sidewalk, an estimate of the cost shall be made by the city engineer or other proper officer. City of Bevier v. Watson, 87 S. W. 612, 614, 113 Mo. App. 506.

PROPER ORDER

Where, on the death of an executor's surety, an order requiring the executor to file a new bond, and providing that on the filing thereof the old bond should be released and discharged, was made and fully complied with, it was a "proper order" within Code, § 3268, providing that if the clerk, on examining an executor's bond, finds the same insufficient, he shall place the matter on the calendar of the court at the next term for the proper order. Bankers' Surety Co. v. Wyman, 120 N. W. 116, 118, 141 Iowa, 574.

Rule 14 of the Circuit Court of Appeals (150 Fed. xxix, 79 C. C. A. xxix), provides that, whenever it shall be necessary or "proper" in the opinion of the presiding judge in any Circuit or District Court that original papers of any kind should be inspected in the court upon writ of error or appeal, the presiding judge may make such rule or order for the safe-keeping and transporting and return of such original papers as to him may seem "proper," etc. Held that the word "proper" is equivalent to the word "useful" or the word "aidful," and the rule fixes the limit within which the presiding judge may act in such matter, and he is not authorized to make an order for incorporating original papers introduced in evidence in the record on appeal, instead of copies, merely for the purpose of saving expense to the parties, not unless in his opinion an inspection of the originals by the appellate court, as distinguished from authenticated copies, is either necessary or would be useful or aidful in the determination of the appeal. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Brennan & Co., 156 Fed. 213, 215.

PROPER PARTY

"'Proper parties' are those without whom a substantial decree may be made, but not a decree which shall completely settle all the questions which may be involved in the controversy and conclude all the persons who have any interest in the subject-matter of the litigation." Leonard v. Pierce, 75 N. E. 313, 315, 182 N. Y. 431, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 161 (quoting and adopting definition in Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 329).

The meaning of the term "proper party," as used in the phrase "is not a proper or necessary party," is not so clear as the meaning of the term "not a necessary party." The word "or" may be used in two forms. In one it corresponds to "either," and in that sense the term "proper or necessary" would mean either proper or necessary—that is, one or the other. In the other form it means to express the same thing alternatively in different words. In that sense the term "not proper or necessary" would imply that it was not proper—that is, not necessary. Jones v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 77 S. W. 890, 893, 178 Mo. 528, 101 Am. St. Rep. 434.

Every party who has any interest in the controversy or subject-matter which is separable from the interest of the parties before the court, so that it will not be immediately affected by a decree which does complete justice between them, is a "proper party." Rogers v. Penobscot Min. Co., 154 Fed. 606, 610, 616, 83 C. C. A. 380 (citing Rev. St. §§ 737, 738; Equity Rule 47; Chadbourne v. Coe, 51 Fed. 479-481, 2 C. C. A. 327; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. [58 U. S.] 130, 139, 15 L. Ed. 158; Ribon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 446, 450, 21 L. Ed. 367; Coiron v. Millaudon, 19 How. [60 U. S.] 113, 15 L. Ed. 575; Williams v. Bankhead, 19 Wall. [86 U. S.] 563, 22 L. Ed. 184; Kendig v. Dean, 97 U. S. 423, 24 L. Ed. 1061; Alexander v. Horner, 1 Fed. Cas. 866, 1 McCrary, 634; Cole Silver Min. Co. v. Virginia & Gold Hill Water Co., 6 Fed. Cas. 72, 1 Sawy. 685; Sioux City Terminal Railroad & Warehouse Co. v. Trust Co. of North America, 82 Fed. 124, 126, 27 C. C. A. 73, 75; Wood v. Dummer, 80 Fed. Cas. 435, 8 Mason, 306).

Necessary or indispensable party distinguished

See Necessary Parties.

PROPER PERSON

A carrier, independent of contractual relation, is under a general obligation to receive and carry on its train all proper persons who apply for transportation and offer to pay the regular fare for such service; the term "proper persons" being defined to mean persons whose status or condition apparently entitles them to be carried as passengers. Bogard's Adm'r v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 139 S. W. 855, 857, 144 Ky. 649, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337.

PROPER PLEADING

The words "proper pleadings," in the rule that to render judgment without proper pleadings to support it is error in law apparent on the face of the record which the court should consider without assignment, are so broad that they might include any pleadings that would be open to special exception, because such pleadings would not be entirely proper. The fundamental error in pleadings which will require no objections to render the pleadings reviewable does not embrace any case in which pleadings defectively state a cause of action, but only where the pleadings are so defective as not to state a cause of action. Rivers v. Campbell, 111 S. W. 190, 192, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 103.

PROPER PRECINCT

"Proper precinct," as used in Rev. St. art. 1589, providing that, if there be no justice of the peace qualified to try the suit in the proper precinct, the suit may be commenced before the nearest justice of the peace of the county who is not disqualified to try the same, means that precinct in which the suit is required by the general rule to be commenced or may be commenced under some one of the thirteen exceptions of article 1585; and, if none of these exceptions are applicable, then the proper precinct is the one in the county where the defendant or one or more of the defendants resides, not a county in which one of the defendants resides. Aspermont Drug Co. v. J. W. Crowder Drug Co. (Tex.) 80 S. W. 258, 259.

PROPER RULE

See Proper Order.

PROPER SAFEGUARD

Under Laws 1903, p. 40, c. 37, requiring the operators of factories, etc., where machinery is used, to provide "proper safeguards," the operator of a laundry is not deprived of the defense of assumption of risk in an action by an employé for failure to have furnished a proper guard on the ground that the guard provided did not prevent the injury while another kind of guard would have done so, where it was not shown that any particular kind of guard was recognized or accepted generally as being essential to meet the requirements of the statute, and it was shown that there were several different kinds of guards in use; no particular kind of guard being required by the statute or any recognized custom or authority. An employer is only required to provide guards sufficient to protect against such dangers as reasonably intelligent and experienced employers would anticipate. Daffron v. Majestic Laundry Co., 82 Pac. 1089, 1090, 41 Wash. 65.

PROPER TIME

The use of the words "proper time," in an instruction in an action against a carrier for unreasonable delay in the delivery of a shipment of cattle, was not erroneous, if, when read in connection with the paragraph in which they were used, it could only be understood to mean a reasonable time. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Stanfield Bros., 90 S. W. 517, 518, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 385.

The term "proper time," as used in the rule of law that, if a contract is voidable at the option of a party, such party should exercise that option at the proper time, can mean no greater period than a reasonable time after those, in whom the power of avoidance or repudiation is lodged, acquired a knowledge of the existence and terms of the contract, or should, in the ordinary course of business, have, acquired such knowledge. City Nat. Bank of Texarkana v. Merchants' & Planters' Nat. Bank (Tex.) 105 S. W. 338, 341.

PROPER WARNING

A charge permitting plaintiff to recover for injuries inflicted by a street car, if de-defendant's agents operating the car failed to use due care in giving "proper" warning of the approach of the car, was not erroneous because of the use of the word "proper"; it being without meaning in that connection, since "warning," as understood, could only mean notice of approaching danger, and, if warning was given, it was sufficient. Engelman v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 113 S. W. 700, 701, 703, 133 Mo. App. 514.

PROPER WRIT

Rev. St. c. 83, § 94, provides that when a writ fails of sufficient service, etc., or is abated, or the action is otherwise defeated for any matter of form, the plaintiff may commence a new action within six months after the abatement or determination of the original suit. As originally enacted as section 11, c. 62, Laws 1821, it provided that any action which should be actually declared on, and in which the writ purchased therefor should fail of a sufficient service, etc., or when such writ should be abated, or the action avoided by demurrer or otherwise, for informality of proceedings, the plaintiff might commence another action upon the same demand and thereby save the limitation thereof. Section 8 of that chapter provided that any action of the case or debt, etc., which should be actually declared upon in a proper writ, returnable according to law within six years after the cause accrued, should be deemed and taken to be duly commenced within the meaning of that act. Held, that chapter 83, § 94, does not apply to a case where an action was dismissed because the writ was made returnable at a term other than the first term after its issuance, contrary to law, since the word "action," as used in section 11, had the same meaning as in section 8, where it was defined as one declared upon in a proper writ returnable according to law, which meaning has not been changed by any subsequent provision; and while the words "proper writ" did not mean one that could not be abated or defeated for any matter of form, but merely meant one adapted to the cause of action, the words "returnable according to law" were definite and explicit and not subject to judicial construction, and hence the word "writ," as used in section 94, means a writ returnable according to law. Densmore v. Hall, 84 Atl. 983, 985, 109 Me. 438.

PROPERLY

The word "properly" is not necessarily a relative term, but may be definite and specific when used in connection with a definite subject-matter. State v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 96 N. E. 340, 343, 177 Ind. 553.

In Liquor Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 34) § 13, the word "properly" means in a proper manner; that is, in the manner prescribed by law. In re Norton, 184 N. Y. S. 1080, 1082, 75 Misc. Rep. 180.

PROPERLY CONSTRUCTED

In an action for injuries from fire, an instruction to find for defendant if the engine was properly constructed, in good repair, and properly handled, is erroneous, as ignoring the duty to equip a locomotive with a suitable spark arrester, as the expression "properly constructed" cannot be held of necessity to include suitable appliances for arresting sparks. Horton v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 49 South. 423, 426, 161 Ala. 107.

PROPERLY COVERED

A planer, the shaft of which turned 8,500 revolutions a minute, protected only by a guard extending over to about the center of the knives, so that the feeder of the machine could not see them, was not "properly covered" as required by Code Supp. 1907, § 4993—a2; the words "properly covered" as so used meaning that the machinery should be protected by such device, made of such material and construction, as would shield those operating the machine or moving near it from contact therewith when in motion, when practicable, without unreasonably interfering with the efficiency of the machine; the word "proper" meaning "fit, suitable, and appropriate," and the word "cover" to "over-spread the surface to shelter, protect, lay, or set over." Kirchoff v. Hohnsbehn Creamery Supply Co., 123 N. W. 210-212, 148 Iowa, 508.

PROPERLY DOCKETED

Under a statute providing that in taking an appeal the appellant must file his transcript in the Supreme Court and have the same properly docketed, the words "properly docketed" did not relate to nice distinctions in making the entries upon the record in correct form, but rather to the duty of doing what was necessary to have the case placed upon the docket of the court, so that it would be before the court in its proper order, and that the adverse parties might raise such questions thereon as they saw fit. If the question presented was of such a nature that it might be determined either upon appeal or error proceedings, a change of election as to the manner of presenting it would be immaterial. The appellant was not required to compel the clerk to make the entries in proper form. Jones v. Danforth, 98 N. W. 668, 670, 71 Neb. 130.

PROPERLY FILED

The word "properly," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1739, requiring a certificate of the clerk attached to the transcript that the undertaking on appeal has been properly filed, has reference to the time of the filing of the undertaking; and if it appears by fair intendment from the wording of the certificate, or by a comparison of the date of its filing with that of the filing of the notice of appeal, that the undertaking has been filed in time, this is sufficient. Davidson v. Wampler, 74 Pac' 82, 83, 29 Mont. 61.

PROPERLY GUARD

"Proper" means "fit, suitable, appropriate"; and to guard machinery properly is to cover it, so as to reasonably accomplish the design of guarding. Miller v. Cedar Rapids Sash & Door Co., 134 N. W. 411, 415, 153 Iowa, 735.

Code Supp. 1907, § 4999—a2, requiring the owner of any establishment where machinery is used to have it "properly guarded," contemplates such a guard as will reasonably accomplish the purpose of the statute. Stephenson v. Sheffield Brick & Tile Co., 130 N. W. 586, 588, 151 Iowa, 371.

Where defendant's jointer was as well protected as all similar machines generally are, defendant was not negligent in failing to screen the machine. Brown v. J. A. Adams & Sons Co., 44 South. 1005, 1006, 120 La. 119.

The words "properly guarded," as used in a statute requiring that, all vats, pans, saws, etc., be "properly guarded," mean guarded against accidents which may reasonably be apprehended or are liable to occur. Ostermann v. Ware, 119 N. Y. Supp. 981, 983, 135 App. Div. 119.

"Properly guarded," within Act May 2, 1905 (P. L. 352), providing that shafting and set screws shall be properly guarded, is a term which depends on the facts of the particular case; and the shaft may be so located as to an employé in such proximity to the place where he works that to protect him against danger an artificial guard is necessary. McCoy v. Wolf Co., 84 Atl. 581, 582, 235 Pa. 571.

The phrase "properly guarded" in the statute, providing that enumerated machinery, including saws, shall be properly guarded, is a relative term, and involves the extent of guarding and the question of the efficiency of the machinery for the purpose used, and an allegation in an indictment for violation of the provision that a swinging cut saw was not properly guarded is merely a conclusion, and there must be an allegation that it is practicable to guard the saw so as not to render it inefficient for the use intended. State v. Rodgers, 93 N. E. 223, 224, 175 Ind. 25.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé coming in contact with knives in a planer, the complaint and answers to interrogatories showed that the knives were inclosed in a boot, except where they extended above the planer plate, as was necessary, and a small aperture in the side of the boot which was guarded by a projection of the plate, and that workmen operating the machinery had no duties to perform requiring them to come in close proximity to the knives, a general verdict for the employé, based on the negligence of the employer in failing to properly guard the knives, could not be sustained, for the construction and manner of using the planer needed no other guards than those maintained. Vigo Cooperage Co. v. Kennedy, 85 N. E. 986, 989, 42 Ind. App. 433.

A revolving shaft hung 4 inches under a table 10 or 12 inches back of the front edge, the table having a 4-inch board along its upper front edge, and another board at the bottom coming up from the floor a sufficient distance to leave an opening between the boards of 10½ to 16 inches, is "properly guarded," within Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 480, c. 415) § 81, as amended, so as to relieve the master from liability for injuries to an employé who was injured by crawling under the table through the opening in front to gather up some accidentally scattered work, though the employé was not warned of the danger of coming in contact with the shaft. Kirwan v. American Lithographic Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 805, 806, 124 App. Div. 180.

PROPERLY HEAT

Under a contract by which plaintiff agreed to put in defendant's house a steam-heating apparatus which should "properly heat" it, where defendant's architect directed that certain parts of the apparatus, such as the boiler, should be of a certain size and kind, plaintiff was entitled to recover if the apparatus would heat the house as well as could be done with a boiler of the kind chosen by defendant's architect. Pitt v. Downing, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 508, 510.

PROPERLY OPERATED

An interrogatory as to whether defendant's locomotive was operated "properly," the complaint alleging that it was carelessly operated, is improper as calling for a conclusion; the word "properly" as used being the antonym of "negligently." Southern R. Co. v. De Pauw (Ind.) 90 N. E. 27-29.

PROPERLY REPAIR

An instruction requiring the city to "properly repair" its sidewalks meant, not that the city should repair them so as to make them absolutely safe, but reasonably safe for the use of the traveling public. City of Mattoon v. Faller, 75 N. E. 387, 390, 217 Ill. 273.

PROPERLY SECURE

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 8822, requiring the owner of a mine to keep a sufficient supply of timber when required to be used as props so that the workmen may at all times be able to properly secure the workings from caving in, the phrase "properly secure" does not mean reasonably safe or absolutely safe, but such security as a reasonable person would afford, commensurate with the impending or threatening danger. Mc-

Daniels v. Royle Min. Co., 85 S. W. 679, 681, 110 Mo. App. 706.

PROPERLY SUBMITTED

Under Liquor Law 1896 (Laws 1896, p. 57, c. 112) § 16, providing that four local option questions shall be "properly submitted" at a town meeting, there has been no proper submission unless the votes have been properly canvassed. In re Burrell, 100 N. Y. Supp. 470, 471, 50 Misc. Rep. 261.

"Property" is nomen generalissimum, and extends to every species of valuable right and interest, including real and personal property, easements, franchises, and other corporeal hereditaments. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 114 S. W. 546, 548, 134 Mo. App. 48.

The term "property" includes everything of value, tangible or intangible, capable of being the subject of individual right or ownership. First Nat. Bank of Estherville v. City Council of Estherville, 112 N. W. 829, 832, 136 Iowa, 203.

The term "taxes on property," as used in the Organic Law, means taxes on things tangible or intangible, as distinguished from taxation on the right to use or transfer things, or on the proceeds of business in which the use of things is essential, and that is because such meaning is the common, ordinary meaning and so the one which, nothing appearing to the contrary, it must be presumed was intended in framing the constitutional provision. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. State, 108 N. W. 557, 563, 128 Wis. 553.

"Property" means everything of exchangeable value, and includes money, chattels, things in action, and evidence of debt. Fishburn v. Londershausen, 92 Pac. 1060, 1062, 50 Or. 363, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1234, 15 Ann. Cas. 975 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5694).

"Property," within the tax laws, includes every species of valuable right and interest. Watson v. City of Boston, 95 N. E. 302, 304, 209 Mass. 18.

The word "property," as used in fire policy providing that it shall become void if the property therein described shall be shut down or become inoperative, vacant, unoccupied, etc., refers to the entire plant, and not to any specific building. Central Montana Mines Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 100 N. W. 3, 92 Minn. 223.

"Property" is not necessarily a taxable thing any more than it is always a tangible thing. It may consist of things incorporeal, and things incorporeal may consist of rights common in every man." Munden v. Harris, 134 S. W. 1076, 1078, 153 Mo. App. 652.

Const. 1879, art. 18, § 1, providing that all property in the state not exempt under the laws of the United States shall be taxed in proportion to its value, and defining the word "property" to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership, requires the taxing of everything capable of private ownership, and deprives the Legislature of power to exempt from taxation any such property not exempted by the constitution itself. Crocker v. Scott, 87 Pac. 102, 105, 149 Cal. 575 (citing Mackay v. City and County of San Francisco, 45 Pac. 696, 113 Cal. 392, 397; Bank of California v. San Francisco, 75 Pac. 832, 142 Cal. 276, 285, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130).

The term "property," as used in Const. 1906, art. 3, § 17, providing that an individual's property shall not be taken or damaged for public use, except on due compensation first made, includes every species of value, right, or interest. The term "value," as applied to property, is the price deemed or accepted as equivalent to the utility of anything—compensation regarded as an equivalent. The law infers value from the term "property," and, if none is shown, the inference will be that the value is nominal. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. State ex rel. District Attorney, 48 South. 561, 562, 94 Miss. 759.

The word "property," as well as "owner," may be used to convey a meaning sometimes broad and sometimes quite restricted. In its general and commonly accepted sense, ownership and property would necessarily imply the power of sale. They are frequently used in a more restricted sense, and as used in Laws 1903, p. 200, providing that the probate court shall not have jurisdiction to inquire into the insanity of any person who is the "owner" of no "property," the property which the person thought to be insane must own is property which he has been managing and controlling, or which he may manage and control in his direction of his affairs. The statute contemplates that, if he be found of unsound mind, a guardian of his person and his property be appointed who shall take upon himself the management and control of such property. Where testator provides for the setting aside of property sufficient to produce a certain income to be paid to one as trustee for another, an incompetent, who shall pay the same out for the benefit of the incompetent, the incompetent owns no "property" within the meaning of the act. Carter v. Bolster, 98 S. W. 105, 106, 122 Mo. App. 185.

The terms "life, liberty, and property" are representative terms, and intended to cover every right to which a member of the body politic is entitled under the law. These terms include the right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, the right freely to buy and sell as others may. Indeed, they may embrace all our liberties, personal, civil, and political, including the rights to labor, to contract, to terminate contracts, and to acquire property. None of these liberties and rights can be taken away, except by due process of law. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry, 76 Pac. 848, 850, 69 Kan. 297, 66 L. R. A. 185, 1 Ann. Cas. 936 (citing Gillespie v. People, 58 N. E. 1007, 188 Ill. 176, 52 L. R. A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176).

A policy covering certain mining property, consisting of a quartzmill, hoist building, bunkhouse, assay office, and other buildings constituting a part of the entire system, contained the warranty that the assured should at all times, when the property therein described should be idle or inoperative, keep a constant day and night watchman on duty, provided that, if such property should be idle or shut down for more than 30 days at any one time, notice should be given to the company, and permission to remain idle should be indorsed on the policy. The property described in the policy referred to and included the entire system, and not any particular property specified as the mill, which was not shut down and idle, and hence the policy was valid. Central Montana Mines Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 99 N. W. 1120, 1123, 92 Minn. 223.

The word "property," as used in Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2367-2377, imposing a succession tax on any property within the jurisdiction of the state which shall pass by will or inheritance, is used to indicate the whole or proportional shares of estates as made subject to the tax; and, as thus used, property in such estates is within the jurisdiction of the state for the purpose of regulating its descent and distribution, is within the jurisdiction of the court of probate whose administrator holds it for distribution. Hence the statute imposes a tax on the personal property of a decedent administered in Connecticut though the property is situated in other states. Appeal of Gallup, 57 Atl. 699, 702, 76 Conn. 617.

Under a will giving all testatrix's property to her sister for and during her natural life, with the power of disposing of any or all the real estate, if she deemed it expedient, with a provision that at the sister's death the property be divided among certain other relatives, the word "property" in the second sentence should be construed as including whatever might remain at the death of the tenant for life. Under this construction the limitation over is not repugnant, but consistent with the object of the testatrix, which evidently was to provide for the comfortable support of her sister, even if the whole of the property might be exhausted, but if a residue remained it was to go to her other relatives in the proportions named. Reed v. Reed 80 N. E. 219, 194 Mass. 216.

A "water right" is the legal right to the use of any unappropriated water of any natural stream, water course, or source of supply, and exists only in contemplation of law, and is for purposes of taxation "personal property," within Const. art. 12, § 17, and Pol. Code 1895, § 16, 3680, defining "property" as including money, franchises, and other things capable of private ownership, and defining "real estate" as including the possession or ownership of land, mines, minerals, and quarries, and "improvements" as including all buildings, structures, etc., and "personal property" as including everything which is the subject of ownership, not included within real estate or improvements, so that under section 3716, providing that the personal property and franchises of water companies must be assessed in the district where the principal works are located, a water company owning a water right without the limits of a school district and conveying water by pipe lines into the district, where it is distributed to the inhabitants thereof, is properly assessed in the district; that being the place of business and principal works of the company. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Settles, 95 Pac. 838, 37 Mont. 237.

Testator bequeathed to his two daughters each two-ninths of the residue of his estate, and to his widow the remaining five-ninths, with power, in addition, to dispose of three-fifths thereof in value, at her election, the remaining two-fifths after such disposition, if made, or whether made or not, at her death to be divided equally between the two daughters, if living, and, if not, an equal half to the children of each, if they left children surviving them. If either of the daughters should die without issue, the property devised to her should be equally divided between her surviving sister and the widow, with power to the widow to dispose of her portion unconditionally, and, if both daughters died before the mother without issue, the property to pass to them should go to the widow, to be disposed of at her election. He then devised to his son, who was then in the Southern Army, in case he survived the War, his dying blessing, and commended him to the tender regard of his mother. Held, that the word "property," as used in the last two clauses of the will, applied to the two-fifths given to his widow for life as well as to the property given to the daughters conditionally, and that the son took no property under the will; it being discretionary with the widow to convey three-fifths of five-ninths to him in case he survived, at her election. Talbott v. Rogers, 139 S. W. 858, 859, 144 Ky. 678.

As all property

Const. art. 12, § 17, reads: "The word 'property,' as used in this article, is hereby declared to include money, credits, bonds, stocks, franchises and all matters and things (real, personal and mixed) capable of private ownership, but this shall not be construed so as to authorize the taxation of the stocks of any company or corporation when the property of such company or corporation represented by such stocks is within the state and has been taxed." This latter section, in its definition of that which may be made subject to taxation, is sufficiently comprehensive to include all matters and things, visible and invisible, tangible and intangible, corporeal and incorporeal, capable of private ownership. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lewis & Clarke County, 72 Pac. 982, 983, 28 Mont. 484, 98 Am. St. Rep. 572.

A statute exempting from taxation, and from sale under execution, lands and "property" of a cemetery association, exempts from taxation and sale under execution only the land actually brought into use for cemetery purposes. Spear v. Locust Wood Cemetery Co., 66 Atl. 1068, 1070, 72 N. J. Eq. 821.

"Under Pub. Acts 1899, No. 188, imposing a tax on the transfer of property by will or by the intestate law, section 21 of which provides that the word 'property' shall include all property or interest therein, whether situated within or without this state, over which this state has any jurisdiction for the purposes of taxation, the inheritance tax to be imposed is measured by the property which it is within the power of the state to tax, and not by the 'property' which state policy has selected for purposes of general taxation." In re Stanton's Estate, 105 N. W. 1122, 1123, 142 Mich. 491.

A city charter provided that applications for street improvements should be made to the commissioner of public works, and signed by the property owners, and that the city council by a two-thirds vote might without petition order an improvement. On the passage of a resolution by the council for an improvement, surveys, diagrams, and estimates should be filed, and notice given by publication. Property owners were given opportunity to remonstrate. If the council ordered the work done, the expense should be charged to the property described in the notice, "provided that no improvements shall be made when the estimated cost thereof shall exceed 50 per cent. of the assessed value of the property to be assessed." No provision was made for an appraisal of the property. Held, that the word "property" in the quoted clause referred to all the property in the assessment district, and that clause did not preclude the making of an improvement because certain lots in such district were charged with more than 50 per cent. of their valuation. Ferry v. City of Tacoma, 76 Pac. 277, 278, 279, 34 Wash. 652.

Under Pol. Code, § 3897, providing that, when the state shall become the owner of property sold for taxes, in reselling it, the tax collector shall sell the "property" to the "highest bidder" for cash, the word "property" means all of the land, and the term "highest bidder" means the one who will make the highest cash bid for all the property, and not the person who will pay all the taxes for the least amount of the land. Fox v. Wright, 91 Pac. 1005, 1006, 152 Cal. 59.

As both real and personal property

The word "property," within Rev. St. 1899, § 7979, declaring that no insurance company shall take a risk on any property in this state greater than three-fourths of the value of the property insured, and, when taken, its value shall not be questioned in any proceeding, embraces both real and personal property. Howerton v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 80 S. W. 27, 29, 105 Mo. App. 575.

Some of the older cases are to the effect that this word "property" both in public statutes and transactions and business affairs inter partes applies only to tangible property, and would not include choses in action, or an interest or investment unless such signification was clearly required by the context or by the facts and circumstances of the special case. Since these decisions and probably in consequence of them this restricted significance of the word "property" in statutes or the rule of interpretation has been altered by express enactment and Rev. Code, c. 108, § 2, subsec. 6 (Revised 1905, § 2831, subsec. 6) provides that the word "property" shall include all property both real and personal. Worth v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 65 S. E. 918, 920, 151 N. C. 191.

Enjoyment, use, and disposition

The word "property" implies the exclusive right of possessing, enjoying and disposing of a thing; and, when used subjectively, it means that with respect to which this right exists, or that which is one's own. Vann v. Edwards, 47 S. E. 784, 787, 135 N. C. 661, 67 L. R. A. 461.

According to the approved definitions, "property" includes the power of disposition and sale, as well as the right of private use and enjoyment. Beals v. State, 121 N. W. 347, 350, 139 Wis. 544 (citing 1 Bl. Comm. 138; 2 Kent, Comm. pp. 320, 326; Bouv. Law Dict. tit. Property; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 396. Dissenting opinion by Timlin, J.).

The right of dominion and power of disposition over a tract of land, constituting "property," includes the right of an owner to subdivide it in such a way as he sees fit, or to leave it unsubdivided. City of Chicago v. Wells, 86 N. E. 197, 199, 236 Ill. 129, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 405, 127 Am. St. Rep. 282.

"Property in land" is the right of user, disposition, and dominion over it to the exclusion of all others. The term "property," as used in the constitutional provision requiring compensation for a taking thereof, means the right to use, dispose of, and have dominion over, property to the exclusion of all others. Drainage Com'rs of Dist. No. 8 in Town of Oakwood v. Knox, 86 N. E. 636, 637, 237 Ill. 148.

Since "property" implies dominion, right of user, or of disposition, the services and advice of an attorney are not property within the provisions of the bankrupt law making it a ground to refuse the discharge of a claim that it is one for obtaining property under false pretenses or false representations. In re Thaw, 180 Fed. 419, 420.

The owners of lots abutting or adjacent to a public street of a city, even if not owners of a fee therein, have the right of access and the "right of quiet enjoyment," and such rights are property which may be protected by injunction when invaded without legal authority; that is, they have an interest in the street not common to all the people of the state, but personal and peculiar to themselves. Their property is affected in its commercial value and in the possibilities and advantages of its use by the character of the streets upon which it abuts. Even partially sentimental objections, such as the noise of electric cars, or the unsightliness of elevated structures, largely make up the actual elements of market value. Such an abutting property owner having this peculiar and personal interest may protect it in his own right in a court of equity against the intrusion of a usurper who comes on the street without color of law. Holst v. Savannah Electric Co., 131 Fed. 931, 943 (quoting and adopting Hart v. Buckner, 54 Fed. 925, 5 C. C. A. 1; Beeson v. City of Chicago, 75 Fed. 880).

Under the word "property," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70, subd. 5, 30 Stat. 566, vesting in the trustee the title of the bankrupt to all property which, prior to the filing of the petition, he could by any means have transferred, or which might have been levied on and sold under judicial process against him, the intent was to vest the trustee with all rights and claims having a pecuniary value, and which could be transferred by the party or parties entitled. In re Burnstine, 131 Fed. 828, 831.

The word "property," as used in Const. art. 1, § 17, providing that no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed for, or applied to, public use without adequate compensation being made, is held to incorporate not only the thing owned, but also every right which accompanies ownership and its incident. A property owner is entitled to recover from a railroad which constructs its yards so near plaintiff's residence as that the noise, smoke, cinders, and gas from the operation by defendant of its locomotives thereon injuriously affects plaintiff's property. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Calkins (Tex.) 79 S. W. 852, 853.

While the term "property" in its appropriate sense means that dominion or definite right of user and disposition which one may legally exercise over particular things or subjects, the words "abutting property," as used in statutes relating to assessments for public improvements, contemplate the res or subject of property between which and the street there is no intervening land. Kneebbs v. Sioux City (Iowa) 137 N. W. 944, 945.

As interest or right

"Property" is the right to or interest in a thing. Commonwealth, by McElroy, v. Walsh's Trustee, 117 S. W. 398, 399, 133 Ky. 103.

As the thing owned

"Property" is a generic term, which, under Civ. Code, § 654, includes anything which may be the subject of ownership. Los Angeles Pac. Co. v. Hubbard, 121 Pac. 306, 308, 17 Cal. App. 646.

"Property," as defined by Sess. Laws 1903, c. 73, an act to provide a system of public revenue, includes every kind of property tangible or intangible subject to ownership. State ex rel. Breckenridge v. Fleming, 97 N. W. 1063, 1066, 70 Neb. 523, 533.

Under Laws 1907, c. 408, § 1 (Gen. St. 1901, § 7502), defining "property," as used therein respecting taxation, to mean and include every kind of property subject to ownership, the finished product of a manufacturer as to which there is no question of ownership is taxable. State v. Holcomb, 106 Pac. 1030, 1033, 81 Kan. 879.

"Property" is something to which the owner can have title. Title may be evidenced by an appropriate instrument. No instrument for the conveyance of things which are not property is known to the law, and none can be contrived. Holcombe v. Trenton White City Co., 82 Atl. 618, 633, 80 N. J. Eq. 122.

"Property," in the strict legal sense, is an aggregate of rights which are guaranteed and protected by the government, and, in the ordinary sense, indicates the thing itself, rather than the rights attached to it. Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 121 N. Y. Supp. 536, 553, 65 Misc. Rep. 263.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 654, 655, 663, declaring that anything of which there may be ownership is "property" under the Code, that there may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or of manual delivery, and that every kind of property that is not real is personal, a plaintiff was entitled to recover for breach of a contract for the delivery of electricity under a complaint charging a breach of a contract to sell and deliver "personal property." Terrace Water Co. v. San Antonio Light & Power Co., 82 Pac. 562, 563, 1 Cal. App. 511.

Bonds in general

Bonds are "property" within Act 29th Leg. providing for the taxing of property owned in the state. Hall v. Miller, 115 S. W. 1168, 1171, 102 Tex. 289.

Bonds are "property" within the statute providing that to actions brought to recover money or property deposited with any bank no limitation begins to run until after demand. Bates v. Capital State Bank, 110 Pac. 277, 280, 18 Idaho, 429.

The obtaining of a surety or indemnity bond by a bankrupt by means of a materially false statement was not the obtaining of "property" on credit within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b (3), 30 Stat. 550, as amended by 32 Stat. 797, which bars his right to a discharge. In re Tanner, 192 Fed. 572, 574.

Business, occupation, or profession

A person's business is "property." People v. McFarlin, 89 N. Y. Supp. 527, 528, 43 Misc. Rep. 591.

A calling, business, or profession chosen and followed is "property." State v. Chapman, 55 Atl. 94, 95, 69 N. J. Law, 464.

While the right to labor or to practice a profession may be considered a property right for the purpose of protection, services already rendered by one person for another are not "property," for the purpose of enlarging or changing the ordinary remedies by which the indebtedness therefor may be recovered. Gleason v. Thaw, 185 Fed. 345, 347, 107 C. C. A. 463, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

A corporation upon complying with the regulations of a statute as to the formation of a corporation has the right to do business; in other words, the "right to be," to "exist." But this right to be or to exist is not an element of property that can be taxed. A corporation might exist for any number of years, but, if it never acquired any property or engaged in any business, its "right to be" would have no taxable value, it would have no cash value or no assessment value, a corporation so formed would likewise have a right to transact business, but until it acquired property or actually transacted some business it would have absolutely no value, and hence would not be a subject for taxation. Commonwealth v. Ledman, 106 S. W. 247, 251, 127 Ky. 603.

A license tax on the privilege or right to carry on a particular trade within a city is not a tax on "property" as defined by Const. art. 13, § 1, declaring that all property should be taxed in proportion to its value, and that the word "property" includes "moneys, credits, bonds, stock, dues, franchises and all other matters and things real, personal and mixed, capable of private ownership." City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Independent Gas Co., 93 Pac. 1006, 152 Cal. 765.

A person's business is property entitled, under the Constitution, to protection from unlawful interference. Every person has a right, as between his fellow citizens and himself, to carry on his business within legal limits, according to his own discretion and choice with any means which are safe and healthful, and to employ therein such persons as he may select, and with such absolute right third persons may not interfere with intent to injure if their demands are not complied with. Purvis v. Local No. 500, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, 63 Atl. 585, 588, 214 Pa. 348, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 6 Ann. Cas. 275 (citing Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 30 Atl. 881, 53 N. J. Eq. 101).

The right to operate vessels and to conduct business is as much "property" as are the vessels themselves. All the rights which are incident to the use, enjoyment, and disposition of tangible things are property. "Property" is everything that has an exchangeable value." An owner of a vessel has a property right not only in the vessel itself, but in its use and the business in which it is employed, which may be protected by injunction restraining unlawful interference with employes engaged in operating the vessel and conducting such business. Sailors' Union of the Pacific v. Hammond Lumber Co., 156 Fed. 450, 464, 85 C. C. A. 16 (quoting and adopting definition in Slaughterhouse Cases, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 127, 21 L. Ed. 394).

Check

An undelivered check is subject to larceny as "property" under Pen. Code 1895, art. 866, providing that "property" as used in relation to the crime of theft includes any writing containing evidence of existing debt, contract, liability, promise, or ownership of real or personal property and any writing, provided it possesses ascertainable value. Worsham v. State, 120 S. W. 439, 441, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 253, 18 Ann. Cas. 184.

A "check" is a bill of exchange, sometimes defined as an inland bill of exchange, and is "property"; it being capable of beneficial ownership. State v. Fraley, 76 S. E. 134, 135, 71 W. Va. 100, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1109).

Conduits in streets for carrying wires

Conduits laid in city streets by a telephone and telegraph company for the purpose of carrying its wires are "property" within Rev. St. c. 8, § 41, providing that the excise tax imposed on telephone and telegraph companies shall be in lieu of all taxes on its shares of capital stock and its property used in the conduct of its business, including the poles, wires, insulators, etc., and are not excluded by the express mention of such other items of exempted property in that section. City of Portland v. New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., 68 Atl. 1040, 1044, 103 Me. 240.

Contingent remainder

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, 30 Stat. 565, providing that all property that a bankrupt could by any means have transferred passes to the assignee, a contingent remainder in land is subject to sale by the trustee. While a contingent remainder is not technically an estate, but a mere possibility of an estate in the future, it is "property" within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, 30 Stat. 565; that term as used therein being of the broadest possible signification, embracing everything that has exchangeable value, or goes to make up a man's wealth, and every interest or estate which the law regards of sufficient value for judicial recognition. Martin & Earle v. Maxwell, 67 S. E. 962, 964, 86 S. C. 1, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1012.

Credits

The word "property," as used in Const. art. 8, § 1, declaring that taxes shall be levied on such property as the Legislature shall prescribe, includes credits, and hence Rev. St. 1898, § 1036, declaring that personal property, for purposes of taxation, shall be construed to include all debts due from solvent debtors, is valid. Kingsley v. City of Merrill, 99 N. W. 1044, 1045, 122 Wis. 185, 67 L. R. A. 200, 2 Ann. Cas. 748.

The word "property," defined in Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10402, relating to assessment for taxation, as every kind of property, tangible or intangible, subject to ownership, includes credits. Lancaster County v. McDonald, 103 N. W. 78, 79, 73 Neb. 453.

Outstanding uncollected accounts are generally recognized in law and in practice as "property," and, that being the case, are subject to taxation. Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, of Liverpool, England, v. Board of Assessors, 49 South. 483, 484, 123 La. 717, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 59.

Const. § 172, requires all property not exempted to be assessed for taxation at the price it would bring at a fair and voluntary sale. Ky. St. § 4020, requires all real and personal estates to be assessed for taxation, and section 4022 provides that for taxation purposes real estate shall include all lands, and personal estate shall include every other kind of property, tangible as well as intangible. Held, that the word "property" embraced everything of value owned, or which could be sold at any price, and included an enforceable demand against a person or property, and that the "storage account" created by the deposit by distillers of whisky in bonded warehouses was property assessable for taxation; any contingency that the whisky might not bring enough to pay storage or might be destroyed, etc., not depriving it of its character of property. Commonwealth v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., 136 S. W. 1032, 1136, 143 Ky. 314.

Dead body

While a dead human body is not property in the usual meaning of the term, it is a sort of quasi property, to which certain persons may have rights, as they have duties to perform toward it, and the right to dispose of a corpse by decent sepulture includes the right to the possession of the body in the condition in which death leaves it. Gray v. State, 114 S. W. 635, 641, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513.

In the sense in which "property" is ordinarily used, one whose duty it becomes to bury a deceased person has no rights of ownership over the corpse; but, in the broader meaning of the term, he has a quasi property right therein, which entitles him to possession and control of the body for the single purpose of decent burial. Litteral v. Litteral, 111 S. W. 872, 874, 131 Mo. App. 306.

Debts

A debt is "property" within Laws 1896, p. 868, c. 908, § 220, imposing a tax on the transfer of any property, real or personal. In view of the definition of property contained in section 242, moneys due a nonresident, who was, because of his illness, unable to transact business, was given to his secretary, and by him deposited in a bank as a special account in the creditor's name, where it remained until after the creditor's death, was subject to the transfer tax, since the money was subject to the creditor's order at the time of his death, and money deposited with a broker by a nonresident to margin stock transactions, which could be withdrawn at any time, is, when withdrawn after the death of the depositor, subject to the transfer tax. In re Daly's Estate, 91 N. Y. Supp. 858, 862, 100 App. Div. 373.

Deposits

Under B. & C. Comp. § 300, providing that all "property" of defendant not exempt from execution shall be liable to attachment, the balance a firm has to its credit in a bank is liable to seizure under an attachment in an action against the firm, the word "property" including money and credits. Caldwell Banking & Trust Co. v. Porter, 95 P. 1, 2, 52 Or. 318.

The word "property," in Pub. St. 1901, c. 64, § 1, providing that every railroad corporation shall pay to the state an annual tax on the value of its property at a rate as nearly equal as may be to the average rate of taxation on other property throughout the state, when considered in connection with the history of the legislation on the subject of railroad taxation, together with the decisions of the Supreme Court on the subject, and when considered in connection with similar language used in the statutes governing taxation of telegraph and telephone companies, and of sleeping, dining, and parlor cars, includes savings bank deposits taxable by chapter 65, § 5, Pub. St. 1901, and, in determining the average rate of taxation on the property in the state, savings bank deposits must be considered. Wyatt v. State Board of Equalization, 70 Atl. 387, 388, 390, 74 N. H. 552.

The words "estate" and "property," as used in the Transfer Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 890, c. 908, are defined by section 242 to mean the property or interest therein of the testator, intestate, grantor, bargainer, or vendor passing or transferred. A husband and wife deposited moneys with two trust companies, either of them, or the survivor, having power to draw such deposits. In the earlier account the husband's name came first, and in the later one the wife's name came first. The moneys deposited in both accounts previously belonged to the wife, and the checks drawn on the early account were generally signed by the husband to pay household expenses, and the later account was drawn upon by checks signed by the husband with the names of both parties to pay for traveling expenses, and often checks were drawn on the later account and deposited in the first account and disbursed for family expenses. The husband contributed his whole salary to the household expenses. On the death of the wife, the balances in the joint accounts were not subject to the transfer tax. In re Stebbins' Estate, 103 N. Y. Supp. 563, 565, 52 Misc. Rep. 438.

Dogs

A dog is "property." Rowan v. Sussendorf, 132 N. Y. Supp. 550, 552, 147 App. Div. 673.

3 Wds. & P.2d Ser.—81

A dog is such "property" as to be subject to levy and sale for the debts of his owner. Vaughn v. Nelson, 62 S. E. 708, 5 Ga. App. 105.

Code 1907, § 5476, provides that, when any stock is killed or injured or other property damaged by any railroad, the burden of showing absence of negligence shall be on the railroad company. Held, that the term "stock" does not include a dog, but that it is included in the word "property," and, the statute being sufficiently broad to include a street railroad, the burden of proof, in an action against a street railroad company for killing plaintiff's dog, was on defendant to show absence of negligence. Selma Street & Suburban Ry. Co. v. Martin, 56 South. 601, 602, 2 Ala. App. 537.

An ordinance of a city imposing a tax on dogs, enacted under Cities and Villages Act, art. 5, § 1, cl. 80, empowering cities to regulate and prohibit the running at large of dogs and to impose a tax on dogs is within the police power, as imposing a tax for regulation, and not for revenue, so that it is not governed by Const. art. 9, §§ 1, 9, 10, providing that taxes levied by valuation shall be uniform as to persons and property though a dog is "property," and though the ordinance makes no disposition of the taxes when collected. City of Paxton v. Fitzsimmons, 97 N. E. 675, 253 Ill. 355, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155.

Draft

A draft is "property" within the garnishment statute. Washington Brick, Lime & Mfg. Co. v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 89 Pac. 157, 158, 46 Wash. 23, 123 Am. St. Rep. 912.

Earning capacity

Alimony can be allowed to the wife after she obtains a divorce under Civ. Code, art. 160, only from the property and not in excess of one-third of the income of the husband, and the word "property" does not mean earning capacity. Jackson v. Burns, 41 South. 40, 41, 116 La. 695.

Easements

An easement is "property." Stein v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 116 S. W. 733, 737, 132 Ky. 322.

The term "property" is capable of including easements. McEwan v. Pennsylvania, N. J. & N. Y. R. Co., 60 Atl. 1130, 1131, 72 N. J. Law, 419.

Street easements are "property" within the protection of the state and federal Constitutions. Minzesheimer v. Prendergast, 129 N. Y. Supp. 779, 781, 144 App. Div. 576.

An easement created by deed is a valuable property right, and cannot be extinguished without compensation merely because of an unauthorized or excessive use. McCullough v. Broad Exch. Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 583, 584, 101 App. Div. 568.

Right to possession of land under an easement is "property" within the law of eminent domain. Lancaster v. Augusta Water Dist., 79 Atl. 463, 465, 108 Me. 137, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1252.

An easement appurtenant to real estate is "property" within the Constitution, and, where the same is appropriated by one having no right to acquire property under the right of eminent domain, the owner of the easement is entitled to appeal to equity to enjoin the appropriation. Batchelor v. Hinkle, 125 N. Y. Supp. 929, 930, 140 App. Div. 621.

A street railway company exercising the right obtained from a city to construct tracks in the streets and operate cars thereon, by actually constructing the tracks and operating cars, obtains an easement, which is property subject to taxation. United Rys. & Electric Co. of Baltimore v. City of Baltimore, 73 Atl. 633, 634, 111 Md. 264.

Equitable, legal, or other title

An equity in incumbered real estate is "property" within Const. art. 2, § 30, providing that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law. State ex rel. Deems v. Holtcamp, 151 S. W. 153, 157, 245 Mo. 655.

"The words 'property of the bankrupt' mean only the property to which the bankrupt is beneficially entitled, and do not include property to which he has only a bare legal title." First Nat. Bank v. Staake, 26 Sup. Ct. 580, 584, 202 U. S. 141, 50 L. Ed. 967 (citing Hewitt v. Berlin Mach. Works, 24 Sup. Ct. 695, 194 U. S. 296, 48 L. Ed. 986).

"In the construction of those provisions of a treaty that provide for the protection of 'property' of owners within the ceded territory, it has been uniformly held that the term 'property' embraces all rights whether legal, equitable or imperfect." State v. Russell, 85 S. W. 288, 291, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 13; Haynes v. State (Tex.), 85 S. W. 1029, 1039 (citing Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. [37 U. S.] 435, 9 L. Ed. 1137; Hornsby v. United States, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 224, 19 L. Ed. 900).

Estate

The words "property" and "estate" are often used synonymously, and are so used in a statute imposing an inheritance tax, at a specified rate, on every $100 of the market value of the "property" received by each person. People v. Koenig, 85 Pac. 1129-1131, 37 Colo. 283, 11 Ann. Cas. 140.

The word "estate," used in its primary sense in a will, without anything in the context to limit it, is nearly synonymous with the word "property," where that word is not qualified by the addition of the word "personal," and under the word "estate," in its primary sense, real property will ordinarily pass; the presumption being that the testator used the word in its inclusive signification, unless the context restricts its meaning to some particular species of property. Powell v. Woodcock, 62 S. E. 1071, 1072, 149 N. C. 235 (citing 1 Underhill, Wills, § 295; Foll v. Newsome, 50 S. E. 597, 138 N. C. 115, 3 Ann. Cas. 417).

In Civ. Code, § 485, making railroads responsible for injury they may occasion to domestic animals on a line which passes through or along the property of the owner of the animals, "property" is interchangeable with "estate." That a tenant has a property in land may not be doubted. Walther v. Sierra R. Co., 74 Pac. 840, 841, 141 Cal. 288.

"The word 'estate,' taken in its primary sense, as used in a will, without anything in the context to limit it, is a word of very extensive meaning. It is nearly synonymous with the word 'property,' when that word is not qualified by the word 'personal.' Under the word 'estate,' used in its primary sense, real property of every description will ordinarily pass; and the presumption is that the testator, in using the word, uses it in its broad and inclusive signification, unless the context restricts its meaning to some particular species of property." Foll v. Newsome, 50 S. E. 597, 598, 138 N. C. 115, 3 Ann. Cas. 417 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Underhill, Wills, § 295).

Exemption under statute of limitation

The bar of the statute of limitations as a defense to an obligation is not "property"; and hence the removal of the bar by statute is not a taking of property without due process of law, within the constitutional inhibition. People ex rel. Eckerson v. Board of Education, etc., of School Dist. No. 1 of Haverstraw, 110 N. Y. Supp. 769, 774, 126 App. Div. 414.

Fee

The term "property in lands" is not confined to title in fee, but is sufficiently comprehensive to include any usufructuary interest, whether it be a leasehold or mere right of possession. Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 933, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

In the constitutional provision as to compensation for property taken for public use, the term "property" includes the fee-simple title to the thing owned, whether it be burdened with an easement or not; and the term "taken" includes the appropriation of that thing or of some interest or estate in it, by actual, physical possession, such as exists when a railroad is constructed and operated on it. McCammon & Lang Lumber Co. v. Trinity & B. V. R. Co., 133 S. W. 247, 249, 104 Tex. 8, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 662, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 870.

Expectancy

A mere expectancy or possibility, as that of an heir at law, or heir in tail while the ancestor is still living, or that of husband or wife, as to curtesy or dower before the death of the other spouse, or that of a joint tenant during the life of the other joint tenant, is not "property" within Const. art. 1, § 10, and the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, providing that no one shall be deprived of property without due process of law. Public Laws 1906, c. 1346, re-enacted in Gen. Laws 1909, c. 252, § 16, authorizing the barring of equitable estates tail and remainders and reversions expectant thereon, violates Const. art. 1, § 10, and the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, prohibiting the deprivation of property without due process of law, so far as it relates to estates in existence prior to its passage, and the rights of grandchildren and heirs at law of testator, existing prior to the act under the will creating equitable estates tail in testator's children with contingent cross-remainders to the survivors or their descendants, and providing that on the death of the children without issue the property shall go to his heirs at law, may not be barred as authorized by the act. Green v. Edwards, 77 Atl. 188, 196, 31 R. I. 1, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 41.

Financial standing or credit

A man's financial standing or credit may not be "property" within the technical meaning of that term, but it is something often more valuable; and, if it be wrongfully injured or destroyed by another, he may recover whatever pecuniary damages he can prove, by competent testimony under proper pleadings, he has sustained thereby. Tootle v. Kent, 78 Pac. 310, 314, 12 Okl. 674 (quoting and adopting definition in Kyd v. Cook, 76 N. W. 524, 56 Neb. 71, 71 Am. St. Rep. 661).

"Property," as used in connection with fraud and defamation, as well as in malicious prosecution, may include good will and credit. Hansen Mercantile Co. v. Wyman, Partridge & Co., 117 N. W. 926, 927, 105 Minn. 491, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727.

Fishery

The right of fishery is "property." Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1068, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 181 Am. St. Rep. 732.

The right to take fish from the tide waters of a state is a "property right" and not a mere privilege of citizenship, and, since the title to the bed of all tide waters in the state is in the state as trustee for its citizens, the state may impose such conditions on the right to take fish therefrom as it sees fit, notwithstanding the license fee exacted from aliens is higher than that required of its own citizens. Leong Mow v. Board of Com'rs for Protection of Birds, Game and Fish, 185 Fed. 223.

Franchise

See, also, Special Franchise.

A franchise is "property," and, like other property, may be taken for public use. State v. Suffield & Thompsonville Bridge Co., 70 Atl. 55, 57, 81 Conn. 56 (citing Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 42 Am. Dec. 716).

A franchise to construct waterworks in a city and use the streets for that purpose is "property." Adams v. Samuel R. Bullock & Co., 47 South. 527, 580, 94 Miss. 27, 19 Ann. Cas. 165.

An ad valorem tax laid on franchises of public service corporations is a property tax; their franchises being deemed "property." Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Capital Gas & Electric Light Co. (Ky.) 96 S. W. 870, 872.

The franchise of a water company to collect rates for water is property, and its value, as well as whatever value attaches to its business as a going concern, is to be considered in determining the value of its property for rate-fixing purposes, but the burden of proving such values rests upon the company. Spring Valley Water Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 165 Fed. 667, 693.

The corporate franchise, the right to be a corporation, created by the laws of the state, and to conduct its corporate business in the state whatever value might attach to such right and its exercise, are "property" of the corporation frequently possessing great value. Marion Nat. Bank of Lebanon v. Burton (Ky.) 90 S. W. 944, 947, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

A gas franchise is "property," a vested right protected by the Constitution, while a "license" is a mere personal privilege, and revocable, except in rare instances and under peculiar conditions. Elizabeth City v. Banks, 64 S. E. 189, 192, 150 N. C. 407, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925.

A franchise to one and to such persons as he might associate with him to construct and maintain a turnpike road and to collect tolls thereon, subject to supervision by county officers granting a right of way, and fixing a time for the completion of the road, is "property" within Civ. Code, § 1044, providing that "property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided by this article," and as such is transferable by assignment or in any other authorized mode of transferring real property. People ex rel. Splers v. Lawley, 119 Pac. 1089, 1092, 17 Cal. App. 331.

The tax law (Laws 1881, c. 293), defining the terms, "land," "real estate," and "real property" as including "all surface, underground or elevated railroads," and the value of all franchises to construct or operate railroads, in, under, above or through streets, is not limited to street surface railroads only, but includes long distance surface steam railroads, and hence a franchise granted by the state to a steam surface railroad for its road in, under, above, or through streets is property, and a special franchise, and taxable. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 133 N. Y. Supp. 135, 139, 74 Misc. Rep. 130, 145.

A corporate franchise, the right to be and exist as a corporation, may constitute a valuable property of the corporation within the meaning of the term "property" as used in Const. art. 13, § 1, requiring all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, but the tax imposed on corporations by Act March 20, 1905, as amended, imposing a license tax on all domestic corporations with certain exceptions, and all foreign corporations doing business in the state, forfeiting the charter or right to do business in the state on failure to pay, is not a tax upon "property," within that section, being a license fee for the privilege of existing as a corporation in case of domestic corporations, and for the privilege of doing business within the state in case of a foreign corporation. Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 103 Pac. 341, 346, 155 Cal. 688.

Laws 1907, p. 126, c. 107, imposing on each domestic and foreign corporation a progressive annual license tax based on its authorized capital, imposes a license tax on the privilege of existing as a corporation, and does not impose a license tax on the franchise to carry on a particular business, and is not in conflict with Const. art. 13, §§ 2, 3, providing that all property, including franchises, shall be taxed in proportion to value, etc., since corporate franchises may be property, or may not be deemed as property; the intention of the statute being that it should not be treated as property in such case. Blackrock Copper Min. & Mill. Co. v. Tingey, 98 Pac. 180, 182, 34 Utah, 860, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 131 Am. St. Rep. 850.

A street railway company exercising the right obtained from a city to construct its tracks in the streets thereof, and operate cars thereon, by actually constructing and maintaining its tracks and operating cars thereon, obtains thereby an easement, which is property subject to taxation, while the unexercised right is a franchise, which, separately considered, is not "property" in the sense that it is substantial value for direct taxation. United Rys. & Electric Co. of Baltimore v. City of Baltimore, 73 Atl. 633, 634, 111 Md. 264.

Good will

"Good will" is not "property," within the meaning of the tax law, and a transfer of good will is not subject to the transfer tax.

In re Dun's Estate, 80 N. Y. Supp. 657, 658, 39 Misc. Rep. 616.

The good will of preparations used in treating the hair and system of treatment is a species of "property." Pope-Turnbo v. Bedford, 127 S. W. 428, 428, 147 Mo. App. 692.

The good will of a business is the favor won from the public and the probability that old customers will continue their patronage. It is an advantage and benefit that is acquired by business establishments beyond the value of the money or property invested therein, and is "property" in the legal sense of the term, and subject to sale and transfer in conjunction with a sale of the business, precisely as other personalty. Haugen v. Sundseth, 118 N. W. 666, 667, 106 Minn. 129, 16 Ann. Cas. 259.

"Property," as used in connection with fraud and defamation, as well as in malicious prosecution, may include good will and credit. Hansen Mercantile Co. v. Wyman, Partridge & Co., 117 N. W. 926, 927, 105 Minn. 491, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727.

Where promoters of a consolidated corporation secured options on various plants to be consolidated, which options included a transfer of the latter's good will, the owners agreeing not to again enter into the same business for a series of years, neither the good will of the promoters, if any existed with reference to such plants transferred to the consolidated corporation, nor that transferred as a part of the plants consolidated, constituted "property" for which stock of a consolidated corporation could properly be issued, within Gen. St. pp. 917, 952, §§ 54, 213, declaring that nothing but money, or property of the value thereof, shall be considered as payment of any part of the capital stock of any company organized under the act. See v. Heppenheimer, 61 Atl. 843, 847, 69 N. J. Eq. 36.

Ground of some kind

The word "property," as used in a contract to build a frame building "on the property belonging to said S. situated on Park Place near City Park avenue, formerly Metairie Road" was insufficient to convey notice to third persons of the particular piece of ground in contemplation of the parties. The word "property" is a very vague term and is used in the contract to indicate ground of some kind belonging to the person erecting the building. Segari v. Mazzei, 41 South. 245, 246, 116 La. 1028.

Ice

Ice on a floatable stream, formed over land belonging to a riparian owner, is "property," within section 21 of the Declaration of Rights, which provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, etc.; and hence Priv. Sp. Laws 1911, c. 92, which attempts to authorize the city of Lewiston to enter upon an ice field in the Androscoggin river to cut ice for the benefit of the city, is unconstitutional for failing to provide for compensation to the owner. Lake Auburn Crystal Ice Co. v. City of Lewiston, 84 Atl. 1004, 1005, 109 Me. 489.

Inchoate land title

An inchoate title to lands is "property." Crochet v. McCamant, 40 South. 474, 477, 116 La. 1, 114 Am. St. Rep. 538.

A suit to foreclose a land contract is a "suit concerning property" within Comp. Laws, § 435, providing that circuit courts in chancery shall dismiss suits concerning property where the matter in dispute shall not exceed $100, etc., and where there remains less than $100 unpaid the suit must be dismissed. Sands & Maxwell Lumber Co. v. Gay, 101 N. W. 53, 138 Mich. 82.

The term "property," as used in the Louisiana Purchase Treaty, "comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete, legal or equitable, and embraces rights which lie in contract, executory as well as executed; and no principle is better settled than that inchoate titles to land are property." Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 35 South. 747, 753, 111 La. 563 (citing Bryan v. Kennett, 5 Sup. Ct. 407, 113 U. S. 179, 28 L. Ed. 908; Delassus v. United States, 9 Pet. [34 U. S.] 117, 9 L. Ed. 71; Smith v. United States, 10 Pet. [35 U. S.] 326, 9 L. Ed. 442; Stidell v. Grandjean, 4 Sup. Ct. 475, 111 U. S. 412, 28 L. Ed. 321; Williams v. Close, 12 La. Ann. 873; Sacket v. Hooper, 3 La. 107).

Income

Const. art. 8, § 1, provided that the rule of taxation shall be uniform, and taxes may be levied on such property as the Legislature may prescribe. This was amended in 1908 by adding a provision that taxes may also be imposed on incomes, privileges, and occupations, which taxes may be graduated and progressive. Held, that such amendment expressly authorized income taxation of a progressive character, in addition to taxation of property, and that taxation of income derived from property was not the same as taxation of the property itself, and hence Laws 1911, c. 658, was not unconstitutional in taxing real property and also the rents derived therefrom as imposing double taxation. State ex rel. Bolens v. Frear, 134 N. W. 673, 689, 148 Wis. 456, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1147.

Insurance policy or certificate

A certificate of insurance in a fraternal order is not "property" in the sense that a change in the beneficiary by the husband from the wife to some one else will of itself constitute a fraud on her marital rights. Hahn v. Supreme Lodge of the Pathfinder, 125 S. W. 259, 261, 136 Ky. 823.

Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, 80 Stat. 565, provides that, when a bankrupt shall have an insurance policy which has a cash surrender value, he may, within 30 days after such value has been ascertained and stated to the trustee by the company issuing the same, pay or secure to the trustee the sum so ascertained and stated, and continue to hold, own, and carry such policy free from the claims of the creditors participating in the distribution of his property under the bankruptcy proceedings; otherwise the policy shall pass to the trustee as assets. Held, that policies having a cash surrender value were governed by such provision, but that policies having no cash surrender value were not "property" within the section, and hence where a bankrupt committed suicide after the filing of an involuntary petition, but before the adjudication, leaving insurance policies, some of which had a small cash surrender value and others none, the bankrupt's executor was entitled to the proceeds of the policies from the trustee on paying to him the cash surrender value of the policies having such a value at the date of the filing of the petition. In re Judson, 192 Fed. 834, 836, 113 C. C. A. 158.

Interest of abutting owner in street or highway

The rights and easements, which an abutting owner has in the street on which his property abuts, constitutes "property," within the rule that a man cannot be deprived of his property without just compensation. People ex rel. Winthrop v. Delany, 105 N. Y. Supp. 746, 749, 120 App. Div. 801.

An ordinance vacating a part of a street without providing a means for the ascertainment of damages to property abutting on the street is void as taking property without compensation, in violation of Const. art. 1, § 16, as the interest an abutting property holder has in the maintenance of a street is property. Smith v. City of Centalla, 104 Pac. 797, 799, 55 Wash. 573.

Where the fee in a highway is in the public, an abutting owner has the right to a way for ingress and egress and to light and air, and these are appurtenances and constitute "property" which belong to the owner, and he cannot be deprived of them for public use and other uses without adequate compensation. Blackwell, E. & S. W. R. Co. v. Gist, 90 Pac. 889, 891, 18 Okl. 516.

The plat of School Section addition to the town of Chicago, recorded between 1833 and 1836, did not comply with the law of 1833 (Rev. Laws 1833, p. 599), providing for the recording of plats in force at the time, so that it amounted merely to a common-law dedication; the abutting lot owners taking the fee to the center of the streets marked thereon. The curative act of 1843 (Laws 1842-43, p. 65) directed the recorder to certify upon the maps or plat of such school district recorded in his office that the same was the plat of such addition, and to make such other certificates thereon as the common council might direct to remedy any omission in the plat or map, and that, when so certified, the plat or map should be valid for all purposes, any omission or defect to the contrary notwithstanding. Held, that in view of the fact that the title of the abutting owners to the center of the street, where the city does not own the fee, is not a contingent interest or a mere expectancy, but a present subsisting ownership of the fee, subject to the public easement, which the owners may subject to any private use in connection with their premises consistent with the dominant rights of the public in the easement, so that the rights of the abutting owners became vested, the curative act could not divest them of such rights, since it would be a deprivation of property without due process of law. Sears v. City of Chicago, 93 N. E. 158, 162, 247 Ill. 204, 139 Am. St. Rep. 319, 20 Ann. Cas. 539.

Interest in pending action

Where statutes make a distinction between a plaintiff's interest in a pending action and his cause of action before suit brought, making the one assignable in cases where the other is not, the interest of a bankrupt in a pending action, which he might sell and assign, and of which his creditors might obtain the benefit on administration of his estate, is to be held "property," within the purview of subdivision 5, § 70, of the national bankruptcy act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 566), rather than a "right of action," under subdivision 6. Cleland v. Anderson, 96 N. W. 212, 213, 66 Neb. 252, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136.

Interest in stock pool

The interest of a bankrupt in a stock pool to advance the market in a certain stock and then sell to the public constituted "property," within the meaning of the bankruptcy act. In re Lathrop, Haskins & Co., 184 Fed. 534, 535.

Interest under will

The interest of one under a will, being a vested interest in a contingent right, is "property," the value of which "can be ascertained by sale, appraisal, or by other means within the ordinary procedure of the court," and so is subject to be reached by creditors' bill, under Rev. Laws. c. 159, § 3, cl. 7. Clarke v. Fay, 91 N. E. 328, 331, 205 Mass. 228, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454.

The interest which one has under a will, his right to receive property thereunder being contingent only on his surviving his father, though the amount may be increased by others dying without issue before his father, and though his share may be increased or diminished by brothers or sisters dying or being born before death of his father, is more than a mere possibility, and is a vested interest in a contingent right, which is

"property." Clarke v. Fay, 91 N. E. 328, 331, 205 Mass. 228, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454.

Intoxicating liquor

Intoxicating liquors, being recognized as "property" in Missouri, are insurable. Kellogg v. German-American Ins. Co., 113 S. W. 663, 685, 133 Mo. App. 391.

Intoxicating liquors, whether exposed for sale unlawfully or not, are "property," in the District of Columbia, and cannot lawfully be taken or destroyed save by due process of law. Nation v. District of Columbia, 34 App. D. C. 453, 455.

Whisky contained in government warehouses before payment of taxes thereon due to the United States is "property" subject to taxation in common with other property in the state. Thompson v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 654, 655, 123 Ky. 302, 124 Am. St. Rep. 362.

The law treats whisky as "property," and, because it is property, protects it the same as it protects milk, for instance, and a trade-mark under which whisky bottled by the manufacturer is sold is entitled to protection. People v. Luhrs, 89 N. E. 171, 174, 195 N. Y. 377, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 473.

"Intoxicating liquors" constitute "property," within the meaning of the laws of this state, even though kept within territory wherein their sale has been prohibited under the local option statutes. Intoxicating liquors may be owned and kept in such territory for a number of perfectly legitimate uses, which readily suggest themselves to any one. This being true, it follows that, before the owner of such property can be deprived of its possession, it must be by some method constituting due course of the law of the land. Beavers v. Goodwin (Tex.) 90 S. W. 930, 931.

Invention and patent right

A mere idea, unprotected by contract or statute, is not "property." Haskins v. Ryan, 64 Atl. 436, 438, 71 N. J. Eq. 575.

Within the meaning of the rule that that which one has been employed and paid to accomplish becomes, when accomplished, the property of his employer, the "property" of the employer is his right to use the invention of his employé. Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, 137 Fed. 403, 412, 71 C. C. A. 207, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1172.

The incorporeal interest of an inventor in an article conceived prior to the allowance of a patent cannot be treated as "property," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, cl. 5, 30 Stat. 566, providing for the surrender of all property which prior to the filing of the petition the bankrupt could by any means have transferred. In re Dann, 129 Fed. 495, 497.

The owner of a secret process, not patented, has no exclusive right to make, use, and vend the article to which it relates, but he has the right to keep his own knowledge to himself, and to protection of the same, as a "property" right against one who, in violation of a contract or through a breach of trust, or confidence, undertakes to apply the secret to his own use or to impart it to others. Hartman v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 145 Fed. 358, 361.

An unpatented formula is not "property," within Const. art. 12, § 6, providing that no corporation shall issue stock except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received. The terms in which this section of the Constitution is expressed indicates the purpose that the assets of the corporation should be something substantial and of such a character that they could be subjected to the payment of claims against the corporation as well as to secure the shareholders in their rights in the capital stock. O'Bear-Nester Glass Co. v. Antiexplor. Co., 108 S. W. 967, 968, 101 Tex. 431, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520, 180 Am. St. Rep. 865.

Where the president and manager of a corporation had completed certain inventions with the corporation's funds while acting as the corporation's agent and employé, and thereafter obtained credit thereon, pending applications for patents constituted "property" which passed to the corporation's trustee in bankruptcy under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a (5), 30 Stat. 565, providing that a bankrupt's trustee shall be vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt to all property which, prior to the filing of the petition, the bankrupt by any means could have transferred or which could have been levied on or sold under judicial process against him; the word "property," as used in such section, being intended to include anything which was a proper subject of a legal transfer. In re Cantelo Mfg. Co., 185 Fed. 276, 280.

Labor

Labor or the right to labor is as much "property" as land or money. Jones v. Leslie, 112 Pac. 81, 82, 61 Wash. 107, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1158.

"Labor is 'property,' and as such merits protection. The right to make it available is next in importance to the rights of life and liberty." Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (83 U. S.) 36, 127, 21 L. Ed. 394 (Swayne, J., dissenting).

Labor is "property," within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition against depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Mathews v. People, 67 N. E. 28, 32, 202 Ill. 389, 63 L. R. A. 73, 95 Am. St. Rep. 241.

"To say that 'time is money' is a metaphor. It expresses merely the fact that time is of value, and that the use of a man's muscle, or his skill, or of his mentality will usually procure money in exchange. But time is not money, nor is labor 'property,' in any other sense than that it is usually of some value, and its proceeds belong to the individual or to the parent or guardian if he is a minor, or to the state if he is a convict. But it is not property in the sense that it can be liable to a property tax." State v. Wheeler, 53 S. E. 358, 359, 141 N. C. 773, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139, 115 Am. St. Rep. 700.

Labor is "property." The laborer has the same right to sell his labor, and to contract with reference thereto, as any other property owner. The right of property involves, as one of its essential attributes, the right not only to contract, but also to terminate contracts. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry, 76 Pac. 848, 850, 69 Kan. 297, 66 L. R. A. 185, 1 Ann. Cas. 936.

Labor is "property," within the meaning of the constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or "property" without due process of law. O'Brien v. People ex rel. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co., 75 N. E. 108, 116, 216 Ill. 354, 108 Am. St. Rep. 219, 3 Ann. Cas. 966.

While the right to labor or to practice a profession may be considered a property right for the purpose of protection, services already rendered by one person for another are not "property," for the purpose of enlarging or changing the ordinary remedies by which the indebtedness therefor may be recovered. Gleason v. Thaw, 185 Fed. 345, 347, 107 C. C. A. 468, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

"'Property,' in its broader sense, is not the physical thing which may be the subject of ownership, but is the right of dominion, possession, and power of disposition which may be acquired over it; and the right of property preserved by the Constitution is the right, not only to possess and enjoy it, but to acquire it in any lawful mode, or by following any lawful industrial pursuit which the citizen, in the exercise of the liberty guaranteed, may choose to adopt. Labor is the primary foundation of all wealth. The property which each one has in his own labor is the common heritage; and, as an incident to the right of acquiring property, the liberty to enter into contracts by which labor may be employed in such way as to the laborer may seem most beneficial, and of others to employ such labor, is necessarily included in the constitutional guaranty." Acts 29th Leg. p. 372, c. 152, § 1, making it unlawful for any person, firm, association of persons, corporation, or agent of either, to issue any ticket, check, or writing obligatory to any servant or employé for labor performed, redeemable or payable in goods or merchandise, and section 2 providing the punishment for violation of the act, interferes with the right of contract, and contravenes Const. art. 1, § 19, providing that no citizen shall be deprived of life, liberty, property, privileges, or immunities, etc., except by due course of law, and also the federal Constitution. Jordan v. State, 103 S. W. 633, 636, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 531, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, 14 Ann. Cas. 616 (quoting and adopting definition in Low v. Rees Printing Co., 59 N. W. 362, 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702, 43 Am. St. Rep. 670).

Land

The phrase "property sold," in the statutory definition of a redemptioner as being one holding a lien by judgment or mortgage on the property sold, applies to "land," as that word is commonly used. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serungard, 117 N. W. 453, 454, 463, 17 N. D. 406, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

"The word 'property,' * * * in statutes giving persons, claiming an interest in condemned property, compensation, etc.," should be held to include every valuable right and interest which a person can have in or appurtenant to land. Brigham City v. Chase, 85 Pac. 436, 439, 30 Utah, 410.

Under Const. art. 3, § 43, making a wife's "property" exempt from sale for her husband's debts, land owned by them as tenants by the entireties is "property." Jordan v. Reynolds, 66 Atl. 37, 39, 105 Md. 288, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1026, 121 Am. St. Rep. 578, 12 Ann. Cas. 51.

The term "property" embraces land as well as personal effects. Indeed, there is no term of similar signification having a meaning so comprehensive. Civ. Code 1902, §§ 269, 270, provide that all persons listing property for taxation shall be personally responsible therefor, and that, in case of estates administered, the property shall be listed as the property of decedent, and that all property of decedents shall be returned for taxation at the residence of the executor or administrator, if in the county, but, if he resides out of the county, at the county seat of such county. Held, to refer to the assessment of lands, as well as personal property, and it is the duty of the administrator to list the lands of his decedent as the land of "the estate of" the deceased and pay the taxes levied. Pollitzer v. Beinkempen, 57 S. E. 475, 477, 76 S. C. 517.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2990, provides that the real and personal property of any person dying intestate shall descend to his or her children in equal proportions. Section 1356 declares that the phrase "real property" shall include lands, tenements, and hereditaments. Held, that the word "property," as used in section 2990, as applicable to lands, includes every species of title inchoate or complete, and embraces the rights which lie in contract, whether executory or executed. Adams v. Merrill, 85 N. E. 114, 118, 45 Ind. App. 315.

Laws 1903, p. 376, relating to street openings, requires by section 15 that each lot, piece, or parcel of land be designated upon a diagram as a basis for assessments. Section 17 requires the amount of assessment to be set opposite each lot, piece, or parcel of land which under section 20 is made a lien upon the property assessed. These sections and sections 23 and 26, use the terms "property," "lands," and "each lot, piece or parcel of land," interchangeably. Held that, in requiring the superintendent of streets to assess the benefits from street improvements on the property of any street railroad within the assessment district, the word "property" was used in a limited sense and as referring to that species of property designated as "land," which as defined by Civ. Code, § 659, is "the solid material of the earth," and hence there was no authority for an assessment against the "ties, tracks, poles, rails and switches" as such or apart from the franchise. Los Angeles Pac. Co. v. Hubbard, 121 Pac. 306, 308, 17 Cal. App. 646.

As used in Const. art. 13, § 4, providing that a mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby, and the value of such security shall be taxed to the owner thereof, where the property affected thereby is situated, the term "property" applies to land and estates therein, and does not apply to assessment and taxation of personal property. Bank of Woodland v. Pierce, 77 Pac. 1012, 1014, 144 Cal. 434.

Under Act of July 1, 1902, c. 1369, §§ 5, 12, 32 Stat. 691, providing that all the property rights acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States are to be administered for the inhabitants thereof, and that no law shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, the term "property" includes land held by the natives under tribal custom, even though it had never been patented to them by the crown of Spain. Carino v. Insular Government of Philippine Islands, 29 Sup. Ct. 334, 336, 212 U. S. 449, 53 L. Ed. 594.

Leasehold

The term "property in lands" is not confined to title in fee, but is sufficiently comprehensive to include any usufructuary interest, whether it be a leasehold or mere right of possession. Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 933, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

Where tenants are in possession of certain real estate under a lease for years, the estate of the tenants is "property," within Code Civ. Proc. § 3353, relating to condemnation proceedings, and defining real property as any right, interest, or easement therein. Baker v. State, 118 N. Y. Supp. 613, 620, 63 Misc. Rep. 549.

Within the meaning of a statute relating to the abolition of grade railroad crossings, authorizing the filing of a petition and the making of compensation to all parties sustaining damage, and providing that all parties interested as lessees or otherwise shall be named in the petition, which shall ask for a jury to ascertain the compensation to the persons interested in the abutting "property," a tenant's term was "property," and the tenant was entitled to compensation for injuries to its leasehold. City of Detroit v. C. H. Little Co., 104 N. W. 1108, 1111, 141 Mich. 637.

License

A license is in no sense "property." It is a mere temporary permit to do what otherwise would be illegal, issued in the exercise of the police power. State v. Seebold, 91 S. W. 491, 492, 192 Mo. 720 (quoting Voight v. Board of Excise Com'rs of City of Newark, 36 Atl. 686, 59 N. J. Law, 358, 37 L. R. A. 292); People ex rel. Lodes v. Department of Health of City of New York, 103 N. Y. Supp. 275, 288, 117 App. Div. 856 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5716).

A license is only a permit to do a particular thing, and it is not "property" in any legal sense. It is a mere privilege granted by a municipal officer empowered to issue it, and is always revocable. The revocation is an administrative act, and may be affected without notice or an opportunity to be heard. McKenzie v. McClellan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 645, 646, 62 Misc. Rep. 342.

A license to sell intoxicants is not "property" within the constitutional prohibition against deprivation of property without due process. Hernandez v. State (Tex.) 135 S. W. 170, 171.

Though a liquor "license" is technically not "property," in the sense that it can be taken away by the state without compensation, yet, under the statute, it is a valuable right and possesses all other characteristics of property. State v. Corron, 62 Atl. 1044, 1053, 73 N. H. 434, 6 Ann. Cas. 486.

A license to sell liquors is not "property" in the ordinary sense of the word, but a mere permission, and the license is but the evidence that the permission has been given by the proper authorities. People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 407, 418, 7 Cal. App. 330, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717.

A pilot's license, duly granted under the pilotage act, is "property" which cannot be forfeited except by direct legislative authority, and therefore the board of pilot commissioners has no power to revoke, annul, forfeit, or suspend such license as a penalty for the breach of its rules. Virden v. Board of Pilot Com'rs, 67 Atl. 975, 980, 8 Del. Ch. 1 (citing State ex rel. Helse v. Town Council of Columbia [S. C.] 6 Rich. 404; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 346; Morris v. Board of Pilot Com'rs, 30 Atl. 667, 7 Del. Ch. 136).

A permit granted by the board of health of New York City to relator to sell milk is not "property" of which, under the Constitution, he cannot be deprived without due process of law, but a mere license revocable by the board without notice or hearing, though, authorized by the permit, he has established a business of selling milk which has become "property," within the meaning of the Constitution. People ex rel. Lodes v. Department of Health of City of New York, 82 N. E. 187, 188, 189 N. Y. 187, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

Liquor tax certificates

"It is true that, under the statute at present regulating traffic in liquors, tax certificates have been held to have characteristics and value which did not attach to excise licenses under former laws, but, when they are referred to as 'property,' it is manifest that the term is applied in a qualified and restricted sense." People ex rel. Laughran v. Flynn, 96 N. Y. Supp. 653, 654, 48 Misc. Rep. 159.

Mining claim or location

Mining claims on public lands are "property" in the fullest sense of the word, and may be bought, sold, transferred, mortgaged, and inherited. Elliott v. Elliott, 3 Alaska, 352, 360.

Mining claims are "property," in the fullest sense of the word, and their ownership, transfer, and use are governed by a well-defined Code or Codes of Law, and are recognized by the states and federal government. The possessory right of a locator of a mining claim, who has not applied for a patent nor done anything to obtain title other than to do the required assessment work, is "property," and upon his death passes to his heirs by descent, and not directly as the designated donees or beneficiaries of the United States under the mining laws; and hence such rights may be administered upon and sold as other property by his executor or administrator. O'Connell v. Pinnacle Gold Mines Co., 131 Fed. 106, 109; 140 Fed. 854, 855, 72 C. C. A. 645, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 919.

Mining claims and locations are "property," being the subject of bargain and sale, and constituting a large portion of the wealth of the Pacific coast states, and, though unpatented, are subject to the lien of a judgment against the claimant. The title of a locator of a mining claim is not only "property," within Laws Ariz. 1891, No. 50, § 4, providing for the lien of certain judgments upon real property, but it is "property" which, in addition to being sold, transferred, and mortgaged, is also capable of being inherited without in any manner infringing the title of the United States. Bradford v. Morrison, 29 Sup. Ct. 349-351, 212 U. S. 389, 53 L. Ed. 564 (citing Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 767,

A mining claim perfected under the law is "property," in the highest sense of that term. Where there is a valid location of a mining claim, the area becomes segregated from the public domain and the property of the locator. Nash v. McNamara, 93 Pac. 405, 408, 80 Neb. 114, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168, 133 Am. St. Rep. 694 (quoting and adopting definition in Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 283, 28 L. Ed. 735; St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. v. Montana Min. Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 63, 171 U. S. 650, 655, 43 L. Ed. 320).

Independent mining claims on the public domain constitute "property" in the fullest sense of the word, so that a valid location of mineral lands, made and kept up in accordance with Act Cong. July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 251, providing for the location of such claims, is in effect a grant by the United States of the right of present and exclusive possession of the land located. Van Ness v. Rooney, 116 Pac. 392, 394, 160 Cal. 131.

Under Const. art. 12, §§ 1-3, 17, requiring a uniform rate of taxation of property not exempt, enumerating what property shall be exempt, declaring that all mining claims after purchase from the United States shall be taxed at a specified valuation, unless the surface ground is used for other than mining purposes and has a separate value for such other purpose, in which case the surface ground so used shall be taxed at its value for such other purpose, and defining "property" as including moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, franchises, and all other matters and things capable of private ownership, and under Rev. Codes, §§ 2498-2500, providing that all property is subject to taxation, except that specially exempted, the surface ground of an unpatented mining claim when used for other than mining purposes and when it has a separate value for such other purposes is subject to taxation. Cobban v. Meagher, 113 Pac. 290, 292, 42 Mont. 399.

Mining right

A mining right to drill for oil and gas in certain described premises in consideration of a fixed royalty, etc., is "property," and should be taxed. People ex rel. Carrell v. Bell, 86 N. E. 593, 594, 237 Ill. 332, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 15 Ann. Cas. 511.

"Anything capable of beneficial ownership is 'property.' The sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over external things of the world, in total exclusion of the rights of any other, is property. So also is the right to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of a thing property, which in itself is valuable. Man's rights in respect to things constitutes property. For example, a valuable right arising by contract to take coal from a body of land, using the land for that purpose and to convert it into salable coal, is property." Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 930, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

Marital companionship

A wife's marital companionship is purely personal to the husband and possesses none of the attributes of "property." Billingsly v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 107 S. W. 173, 174, 84 Ark. 617, 120 Am. St. Rep. 95.

Money

Property as money, see Money.

The word "property" embraces money. Fullerton v. Young, 94 N. Y. Supp. 511, 512, 46 Misc. Rep. 292 (citing Laws 1892, p. 1496, c. 677, §§ 2-4).

Money is "property" subject to levy by execution. Exchange Nat. Bank of Montgomery v. Stewart, 48 South. 487, 489, 156 Ala. 218.

"Money is certainly 'property,' whether we regard any of its forms or any of its theories. It may be composed of a precious metal, and hence valuable of itself, gaining little or no addition of value from the attributes which give it its ready exchangeability and currency. And its other forms are immediately convertible into the same precious metal, and even without such conversion have, at times, even greater commercial efficacy than it." Pirie v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 908, 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. Ed. 1171.

A borrowing of money does not constitute the "obtaining of property on credit" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b (3), 30 Stat. 550, as amended February 5, 1903 (32 Stat. 797, c. 487), and the obtaining by a bankrupt of a loan from a bank by means of a materially false statement in writing made for the purpose is not ground for denying him a discharge. The word "property" is nomen generalissimum and of wide signification, and in its broadest sense would, of course, include money as well as everything else which can be the subject of ownership. In re Pfaffinger, 154 Fed. 528, 530 (citing United States v. Isham, 17 Wall. [84 U. S.] 504, 21 L. Ed. 723).

The word "property," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60, 30 Stat. 562, providing that a person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has made a transfer of any of his property, etc., includes money. West v. Bank of LaHoma, 85 Pac. 469, 470, 16 Okl. 328.

One borrowing money obtains "property" on credit, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14, cl. b. (3), 30 Stat. 550, as amended (32 Stat. 797), forbidding the discharge of a bankrupt who has obtained property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing, etc. In re Gilpin, 160 Fed. 171, 172.

An instruction, in a prosecution for forgery, that "the instrument must be such, if true, as would have created, increased, diminished, discharged, or defeated any pecuniary obligation, or that would have transferred or affected any property or any money whatever," is not erroneous because of the use of the word "money," though the statute uses only the word "property," as "property" includes "money." Williams v. State, 124 S. W. 954, 955, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 82.

"Property," in its ordinary and common meaning, "is 'anything of value,' 'anything that may be owned or possessed,' 'anything which has debt paying or debt securing power.' * * * Money is property in its most available and efficient form." The word "property," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14, 30 Stat. 550, as amended (32 Stat. 797), providing that the courts shall discharge the applicant unless he has obtained property on credit from another person on a materially false statement made in writing to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit, means anything of value, anything that might be owned or possessed, anything having a debt paying or a debt securing power, including money, so that an objection that the bankrupt obtained a loan of money by making a materially false statement in writing constituted a valid objection to his discharge. In re Louisville Nat. Banking Co., 158 Fed. 403-405, 85 C. C. A. 513 (citing and adopting United States v. Isham, 17 Wall. [84 U. S.] 496, 21 L. Ed. 728; Pirle v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 21 Sup. Ct. 906, 182 U. S. 438, 45 L. Ed. 1171).

Mortgage lien

A mortgage is "property," within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 93, § 282, prohibiting an executor from selling any "property" of his decedent without first obtaining an order of the court, since the laws recognize the right of property in mortgages and regulate the acquisition and transfer of the same, and since article 66, § 21, provides that on the death of a mortgagee his interest in the mortgaged lands and his right to the mortgage debt shall devolve on his executor; the word "property" ordinarily embracing every species of valuable right and interest including real and personal property, easements, franchises, and hereditaments. Alexander v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 70 Atl. 209, 211, 108 Md. 541.

Natural gas

The Century Dictionary defines the word "property" as follows: The right to the use or enjoyment or the beneficial right of disposal of anything that can be the subject of ownership; ownership; estate; especially, ownership of tangible things. The word "property," as applied to lands, comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete. It is supposed to embrace those rights which lie in contract, those which are executory, as well as those which are executed. Natural gas found within the territorial limits of a state is not a product which the state may conserve and preserve by law as a thing in which the people of the state have a common interest, as flowing streams, wild animals, etc.; but one who by lawful right reduces it to possession has the absolute right of property therein, with the right to transport and sell and deliver the same as other personal property, of which right he cannot be deprived by the state without just compensation, without violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, and also article 2, § 24, of the state Constitution of Oklahoma. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Haskell, 172 Fed. 545, 565 (quoting and adopting definition in Soulard v. United States, 4 Pet. [29 U. S.] 511, 7 L. Ed. 938).

Option for purchase of land

An option for the purchase of manufacturing plants is "property." Haskins v. Ryan, 78 Atl. 566, 75 N. J. Eq. 330.

Ore and mineral

Ores and minerals in place are "property," which by a proper conveyance may be severed from the land by the owner thereof, and when so severed they become subject to taxation separate and apart from the land itself. State v. Downman (Tex.) 134 S. W. 787, 788.

Paper currency

Pen. Code 1895, art. 866, provides that the term "property," in relation to theft, includes every article commonly known and called personal property. Held that, since paper currency of the United States was "property" within such definition, an indictment, charging theft of $50 in paper currency of the value of $50, was not fatally defective for failure to allege that such currency was money, or, if not money, for failure to describe it more specifically. Diaz v. State, 137 S. W. 377, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 317.

Passenger ticket

Railroad tickets, issued by a railroad company, and authorizing the owner to be transferred between certain points on the railroad, are "property," and may be the subject of larceny. Patrick v. State, 98 S. W. 840, 841, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 496, 123 Am. St. Rep. 861, 14 Ann. Cas. 177.

A suit by a carrier to enjoin ticket scalpers from dealing in nontransferable passenger tickets is a suit in personam to protect by injunction the property right of the carrier to do a lawful business in a particular way, and the venue is not controlled by Mills' Ann. Code, § 25a, requiring the venue of actions affecting property to be in the county where the property is situated. A passenger ticket is mere evidence of a contract, and is not "property," within Mills' Ann. Code, § 25a, requiring the venue of actions affecting property to be in the county where the property is situated. Kirby v. Union Pac. R. Co., 119 Pac. 1042, 1052, 1053, 51 Colo. 509, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 461.

A nontransferable passenger ticket issued under contract at a reduced rate, being a mere token of the purchaser's right to be transported according to its terms, and not "property" in its general sense, Acts 1905, p. 873, c. 410, prohibiting the purchase and sale of such tickets by any person, other than the authorized agent of the common carrier, issuing the same, is not unconstitutional as depriving the purchaser of his property without due process of law. Samuelson v. State, 95 S. W. 1012, 1017, 116 Tenn. 470, 115 Am. St. Rep. 805 (citing People ex rel. Tyroler v. Warden of City Prison, 51 N. E. 1006, 157 N. Y. 116, 43 L. R. A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763; O'Rourke v. Street Ry. Co., 52 S. W. 872, 103 Tenn. 124, 46 L. R. A. 614, 76 Am. St. Rep. 639).

Personal property

The word "property," in a statute exempting from taxation "cemetery lands and property" of cemetery associations, does not include personal property. State ex rel. Mount Mora Cemetery Ass'n v. Casey, 109 S. W. 1, 5, 210 Mo. 235 (citing Rosedale Cemetery Ass'n v. Linden Tp., 63 Atl. 904, 73 N. J. Law, 421).

"Property," in the hands or possession of a garnishee, to be subject to process must be personal property in his possession capable of being seized and sold under execution. Keyes v. Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co., 25 Wis. 691, 693.

"Property" for taxation purposes includes all personal property, all rights, credits, bonds, securities, promissory notes, open accounts, and other obligations, all cash, all money loaned at interest, all movable and immovable, corporeal and incorporeal, articles and things of value owned and held, and controlled within the state by any person in any capacity whatsoever. State Board of Assessors of Parish of Orleans v. Comptoir National D'Escompte, 24 Sup. Ct. 109, 111, 191 U. S. 388, 48 L. Ed. 232.

Possession

The term "property in lands" is not confined to title in fee, but is sufficiently comprehensive to include any usufructuary interest, whether it be a leasehold or mere right of possession. Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 933, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

Possible future interest

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70a, 30 Stat. 565, providing that all property which a bankrupt could by any means have transferred passes to the assignee, where a bankrupt could transfer a possible future interest in personal property before his bankruptcy, it passes to the assignee in bankruptcy. Martin & Earle v. Maxwell, 67 S. E. 962, 964, 86 S. C. 1, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1012.

Power

A power is not "property" but a mere authority. Melton v. Camp, 49 S. E. 690, 121 Ga. 693.

Premises

The phrase "property sold," in the statutory definition of a redemptioner as being one holding a lien by judgment or mortgage on the property sold, applies to "premises," as that word is commonly used. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serungard, 117 N. W. 453, 454, 463, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

Privileges of members of fraternal order

The moral, intellectual, and social privileges of which members of a subordinate lodge of a fraternal order, consisting of a supreme lodge and of subordinate lodges, have been deprived by the suspension of the subordinate lodge, and deprivation thereby of the right to participate in the control of the incorporated Supreme Lodge, are merely incidents to membership, and do not constitute "property," within Bill of Rights. Lone Star Lodge No. 1,935, Knights and Ladies of Honor, v. Cole (Tex.) 131 S. W. 1180, 1185.

Promissory note

A promissory note is something more than a mere written promise. It is a negotiable instrument. It is recognized by the law merchant as "property." Manning v. Berdan, 132 Fed. 382, 386.

Notes are "property," within Act 29th Leg., providing for the taxing of property owned in the state. Hall v. Miller, 115 S. W. 1168, 1171, 102 Tex. 289.

The word "property," in many cases, is construed to include things in action and evidences of debt; thus Rev. St. 1898, § 4423, punishing one obtaining by false pretenses any money, goods, wares, or merchandise or other property, makes it a criminal offense to obtain by false pretenses a promissory note, notwithstanding the rule noscitur a sociis. Clawson v. State, 109 N. W. 578, 579, 129 Wis. 650, 116 Am. St. Rep. 972, 9 Ann. Cas. 966.

Public office

Under the term "property" is included the right to hold public office. State ex rel. Gulon v. Miles, 109 S. W. 595, 610, 210 Mo. 127.

The right of an incumbent to his office is not a right of "property" within Const. art. 1, § 9, against depriving a person of property without due process of law. State v. Henderson, 124 N. W. 767, 770, 145 Iowa, 657, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1286.

The office of school commissioner is not "property" in the sense that removal therefrom without a hearing is a taking of property without due process of law. People ex rel. Woodward v. Draper, 124 N. Y. Supp. 758, 761, 67 Misc. Rep. 460.

A public office does not come within the meaning of the word "property," within Const. art. 2, § 21, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by the law of the land, and Kirby's Dig. § 7892, providing that a county officer indicted for malfeasance or nonfeasance shall be suspended till tried, does not conflict with the constitutional provision. Sumpter v. State, 98 S. W. 719, 720, 81 Ark. 60.

To what extent the word "property" applies to an office, its duties, its emoluments, and when and how an office may be abolished or the office retained and its duties either transferred to another or distributed among other governmental agencies, it has been necessary to make many delicate distinctions. An officer appointed for a definite time to a public office has not a vested property interest therein, or contract right thereto, of which the Legislature cannot deprive him. Mial v. Ellington, 46 S. E. 961, 969, 134 N. C. 131, 65 L. R. A. 697.

The office of member of the board of education of a city is "property" only in the sense that the incumbent is entitled to the emoluments of the office so long as he holds it lawfully; but the office is not property within the state and federal Constitutions, providing that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law, and a recall provision in the charter of a city is not invalid as depriving an officer of property without due process of law. Bonner v. Belsterling (Tex.) 137 S. W. 1154, 1157.

A public office is a public trust or agency, and not the property of the incumbent; and when he is removed therefrom he is not deprived of any property, and hence Act Oct. 14, 1879, providing that a railroad commissioner may be removed by a majority vote of each house of the General Assembly after suspension by the Governor, is not violative of the United States Constitution, amend. art. 14, § 1, prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law, nor of Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 3, to the same effect, because it makes no provision for notice to the commissioner nor for a hearing or trial on charges regularly preferred against him as a condition precedent to his removal. Gray v. McLendon, 67 S. E. 859, 869, 134 Ga. 224.

"An 'office' is as much a species of 'property' as anything which is capable of being held or owned, and to deprive one of it, or unjustly withhold it, is an injury which the law can redress in a manner as ample as it can any other wrong. * * * The right to exercise a public office is a species of property, equally with any other thing capable of possession, and the law affords adequate redress when the enjoyment of it is wrongfully prevented. 3 Kent, Comm. 454; Wammack v. Holloway, 2 Ala. 31. The same doctrine is recognized in Dodd v. Weaver, 2 Sneed [84 Tenn.] 670. But the right to the office does not entitle the officer to the compensation as under a contract. He takes it subject to the authority of the creating power to modify the compensation or to discontinue the office. Haynes v. State, 3 Humph. [22 Tenn.] 480, 39 Am. Dec. 189; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677. With this qualification the officer is entitled to the office, and to its emoluments, and to redress interference with his rights." Malone v. Williams, 103 S. W. 798, 818, 118 Tenn. 390, 121 Am. St. Rep. 1002 (quoting and adopting definition in Mayor, etc., of City of Memphis v. Woodward, 12 Heisk. [59 Tenn.] 469, 27 Am. Rep. 750).

The state may decline to confer official power on residents of other states without depriving such nonresidents of "liberty" or "property," within the meaning of those words as used in the Constitution. A nonresident can have no property right in the fees provided by law to be paid as compensation for the performance of the duties of an office created by or existing in virtue of the statutes of this state. No nonresident has any right of liberty or "property" in the fees or emoluments of the office of executor or administrator. In re Mulford, 75 N. E. 345, 346, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 3 Ann. Cas. 986.

Public property

The word "property," as used in the Constitution (Civ. Code, § 5883), providing that taxation shall be uniform on all property subject to be taxed within the limits of the authority levying the tax, does not require the taxing of public property or any of the lawful instrumentalities of government. Penick v. Foster, 58 S. E. 773, 776, 129 Ga. 217, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159, 12 Ann. Cas. 246.

Public records

Where a city treasurer prepared a card index system referring to assessments for public improvements at his own expense, such indexes not being required by law, an injunction against the removal of the indexes at the expiration of his term is not a "taking" of services or "property" without just compensation, and does not violate Const. art. 1, § 21, prohibiting such taking without just compensation. Robison v. Fishback, 93 N. E. 666, 669, 175 Ind. 132, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1271.

Railroad bonds

Railroad mortgage bonds, constituting the absolute property of a debtor, but registered in the names of his infant children and deposited with a third person, were attached by creditors. The court had jurisdiction over the debtor and his infant children, and could at any time acquire jurisdiction over the third person. The bonds were payable outside the state by foreign corporations. Held, that the bonds were "property," within Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 9, § 10, declaring that any kind of property belonging to defendant may be attached. De Bearn v. De Galard De Brassac De Bearn, 81 Atl. 223, 226, 115 Md. 668, 86 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421.

Railroad cars loaded with freight

The railroad law providing that a railroad company has power to take and to convey persons and property on its railroad and receive compensation therefor, when it speaks of a railroad carrying "property," uses the word "property" in its broadest sense, and seems to embrace everything which a railroad may carry, except persons. Under this word "property" it transfers, for hire or otherwise, the cars of other railroads, either with or without freight, and may take a new and empty car from the factory upon its road and deliver it to the road for which it is intended; and its right to receive pay arises from the fact that it is carrying "property." Section 12 of the railroad law required that railroads which are intersected by another railroad "shall receive from each other, and forward to their destination, goods, merchandise, and 'other property' intended for points on their respective roads." "Other property," as used in this connection, properly means any property which, from its nature and the condition in which it is, is reasonably capable of being transported over the road. Railroad Law, § 12 (Laws 1890, p. 1067, c. 565), requiring intersecting railroads to receive from each other and forward merchandise and "other property," and section 35 (page 1094) requiring such lines to afford each other equal terms for accommodation in the transportation of cars, passengers, baggage, and freight, required such roads to interchange cars loaded with freight. Hudson Valley R. Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 928, 932, 45 Misc. Rep. 520.

Railroad ticket

A suit by a carrier to enjoin ticket scalpers from dealing in nontransferable passenger tickets is a suit in personam to protect by injunction the property right of the carrier to do a lawful business in a particular way, and the venue is not controlled by Mills' Ann. Code, § 25a, requiring the venue of actions affecting property to be in the county where the property is situated. A passenger ticket is mere evidence of a contract, and is not "property" within Mills' Ann. Code, § 25a, requiring the venue of actions affecting property to be in the county where the property is situated. Kirby v. Union Pac. R. Co., 119 Pac. 1042, 1052, 1053, 51 Colo. 509, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 461.

Real property

The word "property," in a will where there is no indication of its use in a restricted sense, includes "real property." Young v. Norris Peters Co., 27 App. D. C. 140, 147.

Under Code, § 785, requiring a city changing an established grade of a street to the injury of abutting property to pay the damages to the owner, and section 48 (8, 10), defining "real property" as including lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, and the word "property" as including real property, a tenant for life or for years of a city lot is an "owner" to the extent of his interest, and may sue the city for injuries sustained by a change in the established grade of the street in front of the property. Chiesa & Co. v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 138 N. W. 922, 924.

The word "property," as used in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2432, 2435, 2436, 2458, providing that, to maintain supplementary proceedings, execution must have been issued against property, means real as well as personal property. Mede v. Meyer, 105 N. Y. Supp. 957, 959, 55 Misc. Rep. 621.

Right of action

A cause of action is "property," which can only be taken from an individual or a town by due process of law. Town of Walton v. Adair, 89 N. Y. Supp. 230, 234, 96 App. Div. 75.

"Property," in one sense, may mean a chose in action. A "chose in action" in one sense may be any right to damages, whether arising from the commission of a tort, the omission of a duty, or the breach of a contract. Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 446, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (citing Black, Law Dict.).

The word "property," in Const. art. 7, § 9, relating to taxation, includes money, credits, investments, and other choses in action. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

A right of action is "property," within Gen. St. 1902, § 237, providing that, when a person having property shall be found incapable of managing his affairs, the court shall appoint a conservator for him. Appeal of Wentz, 56 Atl. 625, 627, 76 Conn. 405.

In some senses of the word, a claim in an action of tort for personal injuries is not "property." It is not assignable, and it cannot be appropriated by creditors in proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency. Mulvey v. City of Boston, 83 N. E. 402, 404, 197 Masa. 178, 14 Ann. Cas. 349.

Under Civ. Code, § 953, providing that a "thing in action" is a right to recover money or other personal property by a judicial proceeding, the right to recover damages from a common carrier for breach of a contract is "property." Justis v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 108 Pac. 328, 329, 12 Cal. App. 639.

The right given by Rev. St. §§ 6134, 6135, to prosecute an action for damages for wrongfully causing the death of another, is not such species of "property" as will pass to the heirs or next of kin of those to whom the right is given. Doyle v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 90 N. E. 165, 166, 81 Ohio St. 184, 135 Am. St. Rep. 775.

Under a statute providing that, when the guardian and ward are both nonresidents, the ward's property may be removed on application by the guardian to the judge of the superior court, who shall grant leave to remove the property, which order shall be authority to the guardian to sue for and receive it in his own name, the word "property" is used in its comprehensive sense and includes choses in action as well as tangible property. In re Crosby, 85 Pac. 1, 2, 42 Wash. 366.

A vested cause of action for damages is "property" which cannot be taken or destroyed without due process of law, being a chose in action. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 69 S. E. 402, 403, 153 N. C. 360.

A vested right of action is "property" in the same sense that tangible things are property. While, in ordinary transactions, the term "property" is not supposed to include a right of action, yet in constitutions and public statutes, where the words permit, and the spirit and intent of the law require, a vested right of action, is frequently considered and treated as property. The right of action conferred by Revisal 1905, § 59, making those causing negligent deaths liable to decedent's personal representatives, and providing that the recovery shall not be applied to the payment of debts or legacies, but that it shall be distributed as intestate property, is property as a part of intestate's estate, and, for the purpose of devolution and transfers, the rights of the claimants are to be determined as of the time when intestate died, and hence under section 4, providing that, when a married woman dies intestate, the surviving husband may administer upon her personalty and hold the same subject to the claims of her creditors and others having rightful demands against her, to his own use, etc., and providing that if the husband dies after his wife, but before administering, his personal representative or assignee shall receive the personalty of the wife as a part of the husband's estate, subject as aforesaid, where intestate's daughter died after his negligent death and before recovery therefor, and her husband became insane after becoming administrator, her administrator de bonis non is entitled to her share of the recovery for the husband's benefit, subject to the claims of her creditors and others having rightful demands against her estate. Nelli v. Wilson, 59 S. E. 674, 675, 146 N. C. 242 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 577; Duckworth v. Mull, 55 S. E. 652, 146 N. C. 466).

The word "property," within the meaning of the rule authorizing the grant of ancillary administration when necessary in respect to any unadministered property that may be found in the state, means either specific property found or a right of action for debt or unliquidated damages to which the estate may be entitled. A claim for damages for the death of a decedent under a statute authorizing such recovery for the exclusive benefit of the widow and next of kin does not constitute assets of the estate so as to justify the appointment of an ancillary administrator in another state. Cooper v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co., 93 S. W. 201, 205, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 596.

Plaintiff's intestate, while a laborer in O. county, was injured, and died intestate in the state of Ohio where he resided, and an administrator was appointed in the county of O., who sued his employer in such county. At the time of his death intestate had no residence nor any property in West Virginia, except the claim for damages against his employer. Held, that such claim was property, authorizing the county court of O. to appoint the sheriff administrator of his estate. Richards v. Riverside Iron Works, 49 S. E. 437, 438, 56 W. Va. 510 (citing Marvin v. Maysville St. Railroad & Transfer Co., 49 Fed. 438; Hartford & N. H. R. Co. v. Andrews, 36 Conn. 215; 2 Woerner, Adm'n, § 306; Perry v. St. Joseph & W. R. Co., 29 Kan. 420; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Swayne's Adm'r, 26 Ind. 477, 484; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177; 1 Woerner, Adm'n, § 205; Hutchins v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 46 N. W. 79, 44 Minn. 5; Brown's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 30 S. W. 639, 97 Ky. 228, 232; Findlay v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 64 N. W. 732, 106 Mich. 700; Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 23 N. W. 143, 65 Iowa, 727, 728, 54 Am. Rep. 39; Sargent v. Sargent, 47 N. E. 121, 168 Mass. 420).

Code 1907, § 3765, provides that the surviving husband of a woman who dies intestate shall be entitled absolutely to half the personalty of her separate estate. Section 4486 provides that all property of a wife, held by her previous to her marriage, is her separate property. Section 2486, giving to the administrator a right of action for negligence causing death, provides that the damages recovered shall not be liable for the debts of the deceased, and shall be distributed according to the statute of distributions. Held, the right of action being expressly vested in the administrator alone, so as not to be assignable, which right is inseparable from the idea of property, and the action by the administrator being more as an agent to effect the legislative policy to prevent homicide, and as trustee of any recovery, than as the representative of deceased in reducing property of the estate to possession, that, where a widow remarried and died pending a suit by the administrator of the first husband to recover for his death, the surviving second husband was not entitled to share in the subsequent recovery, the wife having had no "property" right in the cause of action, within the meaning of the statutes of distribution, her interest being merely personal, especially in view of Code 1907, § 2, defining "personal property" as money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt; the use of the phrase "things in action," in connection only with assignable property, indicating the legislative intent that it shall have a similar meaning. Holt v. Stollenwerck, 56 South. 912, 913, 174 Ala. 213.

Under Const. art. 4, § 27, giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of actions on contract, wherein the sum demanded does not exceed $200, and "jurisdiction of other civil actions wherein the value of the property in controversy does not exceed $50," and under Revisal 1905, § 1420, enacted in pursuance of the Constitution, a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of all actions ex delicto in which the damages demanded do not exceed $50, and not merely cases of tort involving property to the value of such sum. The words "When the property in controversy does not exceed $50" mean the value of the injury involved in the litigation. In the business affairs and transactions of individuals and the construction of instruments which concern the devolution and transfer of property between them, this term "property" has usually received a more restricted construction. It has been so in the decisions of our own court; but in constitutions and in public statutes, where the words permit, and the spirit and intent of the law require, the word "property" has frequently and more usually been accorded a broader significance which we have given it. In the sections of our Constitution protecting life and property, the term is held to include vested rights of action. A vested right of action is "property" in the same sense in which tangible things are property, and is equally protected from arbitrary interference. A cause of action accruing at common law, or by contract, which is fixed and settled in a particular person and continues in force, is a vested right, within the protection of the Constitution. It is property, and it cannot lawfully be divested by legislative interference or by taking away the legal means of making it effective, or by so hampering it with conditions or restrictions as to render it practically worthless. Duckworth v. Mull, 55 S. E. 850, 852, 143 N. C. 461 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 577; Black, Const. Law, p. 432; Angle v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 240, 151 U. S. 1, 19, 38 L. Ed. 55; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dunn, 52 Ill. 260, 4 Am. Rep. 606).

A right of way is "property," and, though the enjoyment of it may be subjected to reasonable regulations for the protection of the public health, the easement cannot be arbitrarily restricted and destroyed without compensation, as provided by Const. pt. 1, art. 10. Durgin v. Minot, 89 N. E. 144, 145, 203 Mass. 26, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 241, 133 Am. St. Rep. 276.

Right to earn wages and dispose thereof

A bankrupt's right to earn wages in the future and dispose of the fruits of his labor is not "property," as that term is used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 70, 30 Stat. 565, vesting all the bankrupt's property not exempt in his trustee, etc.; and hence the bankrupt's discharge operated to avoid an assignment of future wages given to secure a provable debt earned after the filing of his petition. In re Home Discount Co., 147 Fed. 538, 548.

Right to employment

Penal Law, § 850, defines "extortion" as the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, etc., and section 851 provides that threats to do an unlawful injury to person or property may constitute extortion. Held, that one who procured for another, without consideration, a position as a painter, and afterward threatened to have him discharged unless he was paid a certain sum each week out of the painter's wages, was guilty of extortion; the word "property" in the statute including every species of valuable right, including the right to employment. People ex rel. Short v. Warden of City Prison, 130 N. Y. Supp. 698, 700, 145 App. Div. 861.

Right to hunt

The law recognizes as "property" and entitled to protection an exclusive right to hunt on game preserves, and that the destruction or impairment of such privilege by the driving away of the birds and deterring their return constitutes an injury which cannot be estimated in money damages, and on account of which an injunction will lie. Guaranty Realty Co. v. Recreation Gun Club, 107 Pac. 625, 627, 12 Cal. App. 363.

Riparian right

A riparian's right to the use of the flow of the stream passing through or by his land is a right inseparably annexed to the soil, not as an easement or appurtenance, but as a part and parcel of the land; such right being a "property" right, and entitled to protection as such, the same as private property rights generally. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 93 N. W. 781, 786, 67 Neb. 325, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647.

The riparian rights of an owner of land bordering on a river of access to the river and to the use of the water thereof for domestic or farm purposes is "property." Waterford Electric Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Reed, 94 N. Y. Supp. 551, 552, 47 Misc. Rep. 406.

Running water in natural streams is not "property," and never was, and a riparian owner has no right to interfere with the rights of other riparian owners by a dam, so as to discontinue the flow of water, without the consent of the lower riparian owners. In re Board of Water Supply of City of New York, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1036, 1047, 58 Misc. Rep. 581.

Under Civ. Code, § 14, providing that "property" includes property real and personal, and section 654, that anything of which there may be ownership is "property," water, and the right to its use as riparian to land, is "property," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1240, enumerating the classes of property which may be condemned, and section 1241 providing that before property can be taken, it must appear that the use is one authorized by law, etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 1238 prescribes the public uses in behalf of which the right of eminent domain may be exercised, and subdivision 12 authorizes the condemnation of property for canals, reservoirs, dams, ditches, flumes, aqueducts, and pipes, and outlets natural or otherwise for supplying, storing, and discharging water for the operation of machinery to generate and transmit electricity to supply mines, quarries, railroads, tramways, mills, and factories with electric power, and to apply electricity to light or heat mines, quarries, mills, factories, incorporated cities and counties, villages or towns, and to furnish electricity for lighting, heating, or power purposes to individuals or corporations, together with lands, buildings, and all improvements in or upon which to erect, install, place, use or operate machinery to generate and transmit electricity for any of the uses set forth. Subdivision 13 authorizes condemnation for electric light, heat, and power lines. Held, that such subdivisions authorize a corporation organized to furnish electric light, heat, and power to condemn the water in a stream, and the riparian rights of landowners, for its necessary requirements, and that such company is not limited to the acquisition of water by appropriation. Northern Light & Power Co. v. Stacher, 109 Pac. 896, 900, 903, 13 Cal. App. 404.

Services of attorney

Inducing the rendition of legal services by false representations is not the obtaining of "property" by false representations, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1898, c. 541, § 17a (2) 30 Stat. 550, as amended (32 Stat. 798), excepting liabilities for property so obtained from the provable debts dischargeable in bankruptcy. Gleason v. Thaw, 185 Fed. 345, 347, 107 C. C. A. 463, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894; Gleason v. Thaw, 196 Fed. 359, 361, 116 C. C. A. 179.

Services of wife

The domestic services of the wife are purely personal to the husband and possess none of the attributes of "property." Bil-linsky v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 107 S. W. 173, 174, 84 Ark. 617, 120 Am. St. Rep. 95.

Shares of stock

Neither bank stock owned by a bankrupt's wife, acquired by her before marriage, nor any share in the bank's accumulated, but undivided, profits are "property," within the bankruptcy statute, vesting in the trustee the title to property which, prior to the filing of his petition, the bankrupt might by any means have transferred, or which might have been levied on under judicial process against him, and the trustee could not recover dividends declared on the stock after the bankrupt's discharge. Bryan v. Sturgis Nat. Bank, 90 S. W. 704, 705, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 307.

Corporate stock is "property," within the meaning of the taxing laws. State ex rel. Weller v. Hinkel, 116 N. W. 639, 136 Wis. 66.

The capital stock of a corporation is "property," within Const. art. 9, § 1, providing for the taxation of property in proportion to value. Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Miller, 86 N. E. 205, 206, 236 Ill. 149.

Stock held by a resident in a foreign corporation whose property is all outside the state is not such "property" or "personal property" as is taxable under Rev. St. 1909, §§ 11,348, 11,415, 11,519; the last section defining property to include every tangible or intangible thing being the subject of ownership, whether animate or inanimate, real or personal. State ex rel. Koeln v. Lesser, 141 S. W. 886, 889, 237 Mo. 310.

Stock of a railroad company, incorporated, doing business, and owning property, not only in Massachusetts, but in neighboring states, but having only a single issue of stock, is "property," within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth, under Rev. Laws, c. 15, § 1, St. 1905, p. 481, c. 470, and St. 1906, p. 453, c. 436, authorizing taxation of collateral inheritance, so as to enable the state to subject it to taxation as against a nonresident owner. Kingsbury v. Chapin, 82 N. E. 700, 701, 196 Mass. 533, 18 Ann. Cas. 738.

Corporate stock held by a corporation is not "property" due the stockholder, so that, in proceedings to attach stock, the corporation is not summoned, and does not answer, as garnishee. Fowler v. Dickson (Del.) 74 Atl. 601, 606, 1 Boyce, 113.

Though the constitutional provisions that all property not exempt shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law, and defining "property" as including corporate stock, are not self-executing, any deficiency was supplied by Pol. Code, § 3627, requiring property to be assessed at its full cash value, and section 3617 defining that cash value to be the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor. Cheeseborough v. City and County of San Francisco, 96 Pac. 288, 289, 153 Cal. 559.

Const. art. 12, § 1, requires the Legislature to prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just taxation for all property except that particularly exempted. Section 7 provides that every corporation shall be subject to taxation on real and personal property owned and used by it, and not exempt. Section 2 prescribes exemptions from taxation. Section 17 provides that the word "property" includes moneys, credits, etc., but shall not be construed so as to authorize the taxation of the stock of a corporation when the property of such corporation represented by such stock is within the state, and has been taxed. Pol. Code, § 3670, provides that all property is subject to taxation except as provided in section 3671, which contains the exemptions mentioned in the Constitution. Section 3680 repeats the provisions of Const. art. 12, § 17. Section 3690 requires taxable property to be assessed at its full cash value. Held, that stock of a state bank or trust company is to be assessed to the owner at its full cash value except to the extent that that value is represented in property which is assessed to the bank or trust company. Daly Bank & Trust Co. of Butte v. Board of Com'rs of Silver Bow County, 81 Pac. 950, 952, 33 Mont. 101.

Const. 1879, art. 13, § 1, required taxation of all nonexempt property in proportion to value and defined "property" to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters or things, capable of private ownership. Pol. Code, § 3607, provided that all property not exempt must be taxed, except that nothing therein contained should be construed to authorize double taxation, and section 3608 declared that shares of stock in corporations possessed no intrinsic value over the actual value of the property of the corporation, and that all such property should be assessed and taxed, but that no assessment should be made of shares of stock, nor should any holder thereof be taxed thereon. The section was subsequently amended to exclude national bank shares. Held, that since, under such provisions, all the elements of value contained in corporate stock were subject to taxation to the corporation, Pol. Code, §§ 3609, 3610, providing for the taxation of stock in national banks, did not constitute a discrimination against the latter, prohibited by Rev. St. U. S. § 5219. Crocker v. Scott, 87 Pac. 102, 105, 149 Cal. 575 (citing Mackay v. City and County of San Francisco, 45 Pac. 696, 113 Cal. 392, 397; Bank of California v. San Francisco, 75 Pac. 832, 142 Cal. 276, 285, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130).

Slot machine

A slot machine incapable of use for any purpose except in violation of penal provisions of the anti-gambling law (Laws 1899, p. 390, § 4) is not "property" within the protection of Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law. J. B. Mullen & Co. v. Mosley, 90 Pac. 963, 968, 13 Idaho, 457.

Stock transfer stamps

Tax Law, § 271a, as added by Laws 1911, c. 12, which provides that no person other than a corporation organized under the Banking Law of the state (Consol. Laws 1906, c. 2) or under the National Bank Act (Act June 3, 1864, c. 106, 13 Stat. 99), or a duly authorized agent of the Comptroller, shall sell any stamp issued pursuant to the article without first obtaining the Comptroller's written consent, and which makes a violation thereof a misdemeanor, does not deprive one who had a large quantity of stamps on hand at the time of the amendment of any "property" within the meaning of the constitutional provision prohibiting the deprivation of property without due process of law. People ex rel. Isaacs v. Moran, 134 N. Y. Supp. 931, 932, 150 App. Div. 226.

Street railroad's right to street together with ties, rails, etc.

A street railroad's right to occupy a public street, together with its ties, rails, rolling stock, is "property" within Const. art. 4, § 31, providing that the General Assembly may pass laws permitting the owners of land to construct drains by special assessments on the property benefited thereby. Spring Creek Drainage Dist. v. Elgin, J. & E. R. Co., 94 N. E. 529, 539, 249 Ill. 260.

Testator's property

Under the Transfer Tax Law, § 242, defining the word "property," that term means the property or interest of a testator passing or transferred to the successor thereof, when not exempted. In re Hellman's Estate, 79 N. Y. Supp. 201, 204, 77 App. Div. 355.

Laws 1896, p. 881, c. 908, defines "property" as meaning the interest therein of a testator passing or transferred to those not exempted. Hence, where a testator devised to his uncle a life interest in his farm, only the present value of the life interest is "property," within the purview of the Transfer Tax Law. In re Garland's Estate, 82 N. Y. Supp. 989, 40 Misc. Rep. 579.

Trade-name

A man's name is his own "property," as he has the same right to its use and enjoyment as he has to that of any other species of property. A manufacturer using his own name as a trade-name is not required to so use his name as to inform the public that his goods are not the goods of a prior manufacturer using the same name, for the prior manufacturer must know that he has no exclusive right in the name as against others of the same name, International Silver Co. v. Rogers, 63 Atl. 977, 980, 71 N. J. Eq. 560.

Trade secret

Equity recognizes a trade secret as "property," and will protect the same by injunction as against those who seek to disclose or use it by a violation of confidential relations or contract stipulations, express or implied. Elaterite Paint & Mfg. Co. v. S. E. Frost Co., 117 N. W. 388, 389, 105 Minn. 239.

Trading stamp

A trading stamp is not ordinarily "property." Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co., 135 Fed. 833, 834.

Trust certificates

"Trust certificates," issued by a railroad company to the stockholders of another railroad company in payment for their stock under an agreement to pay semiannual dividends thereon, and a specified sum at a designated future date for each share, were "property," and could be bought and sold. Kissel v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 937, 955, 126 App. Div. 852.

Trust property

A trust fund provided to secure the support of a woman and her family is "property," in the true sense of the term, though it be in such form that the beneficiary cannot assign or convey or devise it or use it in any manner otherwise than that specified in the terms of the trust. Meyer v. Meyer, 102 N. W. 52, 55, 123 Wis. 538.

The term "property" suggests some unrestricted or exclusive right to that which has been created or acquired. It is an inherent right to the dominion over and the beneficial enjoyment of some valuable right or interest, which cannot be predicated of the estate of a trustee. Metcalfe v. Union Trust Co. of New York, 73 N. E. 498, 500, 181 N. Y. 89.

Water mains, hydrants, and electric light fixtures of municipality

The water mains, hydrants, and electric light fixtures of a city are "private property" owned by it in its corporate capacity. They have a permanent situs, within a drainage district, and constitute "property" and "other property liable to assessment," within the meaning of Laws 1909, c. 80. State v. Board of Com'rs of Shawnee County, 110 Pac. 92, 93, 95, 83 Kan. 199.

Wild animals

A landlord has no right to distrain for rent, where he has let land with the agreement that muskrats, which the tenant may take upon the property, are to be divided; for these animals are not "property," within the meaning of the law, out of which rent arises. McLain v. Willey (Del.) 78 Atl. 493, 494, 2 Boyce, 186.

An inhabitant of the state has no such "property" in wild deer on his land that he may kill dogs attacking them in the close season, since wild game belongs to the people of the state in their collective and sovereign capacity, and not in their individual and private capacity, except so far as private ownership may be acquired therein under the Constitution, authorizing inhabitants, in reasonable time, to hunt on their lands and other lands not inclosed, under proper regulations by the Legislature, and, as an inhabitant may not hunt deer on his land in the close season, he has no "property" in them then. Zanetta v. Bolles, 67 Atl. 818, 80 Vt. 345 (citing Payne v. Sheets, 55 Atl. 656, 75 Vt. 385).

PROPERTY ACTUALLY RECEIVED

See Actually Receive.

PROPERTY ALLEGED TO BELONG TO ESTATE

The expression "property alleged to belong to the estate," found in Code Civ. Proc. § 2731, providing that where a contest arises between the accounting parties and any of the other parties respecting property alleged to belong to the estate, but to which the accounting party lays claim, either individually or as a representative of the estate, the contest mentioned, except where the claim is made in a representative capacity, may be tried and determined in the same manner as any other issue arising in the Surrogate's Court, means property which is deemed assets, as defined in section 2712, and which may be inventoried under section 2714. In re Thompson, 76 N. E. 870, 872, 184 N. Y. 36.

PROPERTY BELONGING TO ESTATE IN BANKRUPTCY

If a bankrupt has parted with all dominion over property, if the title is gone out of him and is beyond recall, it is not his property, and therefore is not "property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy," and hence cannot be concealed. In re Hammerstein, 189 Fed. 37, 39, 110 C. C. A. 472.

PROPERTY BENEFITED

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7785, provides that when an ordinance under which a municipal improvement is ordered shall not provide that such improvements shall be made wholly by special assessment, upon the property benefited, the whole amount of such damage and costs, or such part thereof as shall not be assessed on property benefited thereby, shall be paid from the general fund of the city or town. Held, that the term "wholly by special assessment on property benefited" refers to private property, as distinguished from property of the city. City of Spokane v. Curtiss, 120 Pac. 70, 72, 66 Wash. 555.

PROPERTY CONSUMED IN ITS USE

See Consumable Articles.

PROPERTY CROSSING

The term "property crossings," in a municipal ordinance, providing for the construction of sidewalks with necessary crossings for the use of property owners, means that part in the line of the sidewalk over which the owner will travel with vehicles in going from the street on his property or leaving the same, and the ordinance is not void for failure to designate the location, number, or method of construction of such crossings. People ex rel. Rice v. Burke, 69 N. E. 45, 46, 206 Ill. 358.

PROPERTY GROWING OUT OF MARRIAGE RELATION

The expression "property growing out of marriage relation," which a court in a divorce proceeding is authorized to distribute, has reference only to that class of property, the interest in which of either husband or wife attaches by operation of law, as dower, curtesy, tenancy by the entirety, or, in case of divorce, provision for division of which is made in B. & C. Comp. § 511, and does not apply to property belonging to the wife. Taylor v. Taylor, 103 Pac. 524, 529, 54 Or. 560.

PROPERTY HOLDER

Code Supp. 1907, § 622, declares that, when the inhabitants of any part of a city desire to have such part severed therefrom, a majority of the resident "property holders" of that part of the territory may petition in writing to the district court, describing the territory proposed to be severed, etc., but where the property has not been subdivided, and there are no owners residing on any portion of the same, the petition may be signed and the proceedings maintained by a majority of the owners of the property sought to be severed. Held, that the term "property holders," as used in such section, contemplated resident landowners of the territory sought to be severed, and did not require that the petition be signed by holders of both real and personal property within the territory. Stason v. City of Albia, 129 N. W. 809, 810, 150 Iowa, 207.

Under Const. art. 19, § 27, providing that the General Assembly shall not be prohibited from authorizing assessments for local improvements, on the consent of a majority in value of the "property holders owning property" adjoining the locality to be affected, the Legislature may amend Kirby's Dig. § 5665, requiring a city to make a street improvement when any 10 "resident" owners of real property petition therefor, by striking out the quoted word "resident." Boles v. Kelley, 117 S. W. 1078, 1074, 90 Ark. 29.

PROPERTY IMMOVABLE BY DESTINATION

See Immovable by Destination.

PROPERTY IN CONTROVERSY

The words "property in controversy," within the Constitution providing that the Legislature may give to justices of the peace jurisdiction of civil actions wherein the value of the property in controversy does not exceed $50, and the statute giving jurisdiction to justices in like terms, mean, when applied to an action in tort, the value of the injury complained of and involved in the litigation, and a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action for personal injuries negligently inflicted, where the amount demanded is $50 or less. Houser v. W. R. Bonsal & Co., 62 S. E. 776, 777, 149 N. C. 51.

As used in Revisal 1905, § 1420, providing that justices of the peace shall have concurrent jurisdiction of a civil action, not founded on contract, wherein the value of the property in controversy does not exceed $50, the term "property in controversy" means the value of the injury complained of and involved in the litigation. Duckworth v. Mull, 55 S. E. 850, 851, 143 N. C. 461.

PROPERTY IN POSSESSION

A remainder interest is not "property in possession," within the meaning of the term as used in a statute authorizing the sale of a vested estate for division, if the estate be in possession, etc. Berry v. Lewis, 82 S. W. 252, 253, 118 Ky. 652.

PROPERTY LINE

The term "lot line" or "property line" has a well-known and understood meaning. The fee to the streets and the sidewalks is in the city. The "property line" or "lot line" extends only to the inner edge of the sidewalk. If the walks were to be constructed one foot from the "lot line" or "property line," that description definitely defines the location. Gage v. City of Chicago, 79 N. E. 294, 295, 223 Ill. 602.

PROPERTY NOT WITHIN THE STATE

See, also, Property Within the State.

The expression "property not within the state" includes not only property not in fact within the state, but also property not within the state in contemplation of law. Bates' Ann. St. Ohio, § 2781, which provides for the listing for taxation by the county auditor for previous years of property which was omitted in such years, and the collection of taxes thereon by the treasurer, was intended to apply only to property which was properly taxable in such years, but which was not returned or properly returned for taxation. All property within the state and not exempt by law is taxed by section 2731, and it was not the purpose of section 2781 to tax exempted property or property not within the state. Section 2781a is therefore constitutional. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto v. Halliday, 127 Fed. 830, 838.

PROPERTY OF THE COMMONWEALTH

The words "the property of the commonwealth," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 5, subd. 2, providing that "the property of the commonwealth, except real estate of which the commonwealth is in possession under a mortgage for condition broken," shall be exempt from taxation, "mean the same as 'all the property of the commonwealth'; and the fact that only one exception is made shows that no other exception could have been intended." Land held under a bond for a deed from the commonwealth, on which a private individual has erected buildings and engaged in manufacturing business thereon, is exempt. Corcoran v. City of Boston, 70 N. E. 197, 185 Mass. 325.

PROPERTY OF THE COUNTY

Lands acquired by a park commission established under "An act to establish public parks in certain counties in this state and to regulate the same" (P. L. 1895, p. 169; Gen. St. p. 2618, § 48) are the "property of the county" in which the park is situated. Essex County Park Commission v. Town of West Orange, 67 Atl. 1065, 1066, 75 N. J. Law, 376 (citing Freeholders of Essex County v. Essex County Park Commission, 41 Atl. 957, 62 N. J. Law, 376; Ross v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 55 Atl. 310, 69 N. J. Law, 291; State v. Crowley, 89 N. J. Law, 264, 270; Herman & Grace v. Board of Chosen Freeholders of Essex County, 64 Atl. 742, 744, 71 N. J. Eq. 541).

PROPERTY OF THE STATE

A mortgage held by the Regents of the University of California is "property belonging to the state" within Const. art. 13, § 1, which exempts state property from taxation, and hence where land is mortgaged to the Regents and the mortgagor's interest is sold to the state at a tax sale, and a resale and deed is made by the state to an individual under Pol. Code, § 3897, the deed to such purchaser remains subject to such mortgage, though Const. art. 13, § 4, makes both the interests of mortgagors and mortgagees subject to a tax levy upon either interest; that provision not applying to public property. Webster v. Board of Regents of University of California, 126 Pac. 974, 975, 163 Cal. 705.

The indictments against a person are "records or documents filed in a public office under authority of law." Code Cr. Proc. § 272; Code Civ. Proc. § 866. They are the "property of the state," and a willful and unlawful removal of them constitutes a crime, under Pen. Code, § 94. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 789, 178 N. Y. 274, 67 L. R. A. 131.

PROPERTY OF THE UNITED STATES

The phrase "money or property of the United States," in the federal statutes, relating to embezzlement, does not include fees and emoluments received by the clerk of a federal district court, and the duty of a clerk of a federal district court to pay over to the United States the surplus fees and emoluments of his office, which is half-yearly returned, or the audit thereof shown to exist over and above the compensation and allowances authorized by law to be retained by him, is not governed by the statutes relating to the embezzlement of money or property of the United States. United States v. Mason, 31 Sup. Ct. 28, 34, 218 U. S. 517, 54 L. Ed. 1133.

Six blank checks, with stubs attached, each of the value of one cent, the personal property of the United States, constituted "property," the subject of larceny, under Rev. St. § 5456, making it a felony to steal any kind or description of property belonging to the United States. Keller v. United States, 168 Fed. 697, 94 C. C. A. 368.

PROPERTY ON OR NEAR PREMISES

The term "property on or near said premises," in a lease by a railway of part of its right of way to a compress company, stipulating that the compress company assumed all the risks of loss to any building, improvements, or property of any kind that might be on or near the premises occasioned by fire communicated from locomotives, was doubtless used so as to exempt the railway company from liability by reason of fire as to the property of the compress company adjacent to the right of way and likely to be involved in the same fire. W. A. Morgan & Bros. v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas, 110 S. W. 978, 985, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 420.

PROPERTY OWNED

St. 1898, §§ 1990 to 2001—20, provide for the incorporation of religious societies, and sections 1771—1791m provide for the formation of corporations for benevolent, charitable, or medical institutions, and for schools, hospitals, asylums, or other like institutions. The charter of the city of Superior (Laws 1891, c. 124, § 244) provides that no land benefited shall be exempt from assessment for sewers, "excepting only . . . property owned by some religious society" or corporation and not used for pecuniary profit. Held, that a corporation, incorporated under chapter 86, to maintain parochial schools, hospitals, and to help the poor, and not organized for profit, though authorized to acquire and hold property, its principal place of business being its hospital, in which religious services were conducted as a part of its administrative work was not exempt from sewer assessments, the term "religious corporation," in the charter, meaning the same as in chapter 91, and the words "property owned," as used in the charter, referring to a use in connection with religious purposes, and that defendant could not incorporate as a religious corporation, because it had no membership maintaining regular religious worship as a church society, a "religious society" being a body of persons organized to maintain religious worship only, who usually meet in some stated place for worship of God and religious instruction. United States Nat. Bank v. Poor Hand Maids of Jesus Christ, 135 N. W. 121, 122, 148 Wis. 613.

PROPERTY RATIONE SOLI

"Property ratione soli" is the common-law right which every owner of land has to kill and take all such animals feræ naturæ as may from time to time be found on his land, and, as soon as this right is exercised, the animals so killed or caught become the absolute property of the owner of the soil." State v. Mallory, 83 S. W. 955, 958, 73 Ark. 236, 67 L. R. A. 773, 3 Ann. Cas. 852.

PROPERTY RIGHTS

See, also, Right of Property.

Immunity from taxation is a "property right." People ex rel. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. Williams, 123 N. Y. Supp. 137, 141, 138 App. Div. 612.

The right to contract is a right of "property" of which the legislative authority could not deprive the individual. Glover v. People ex rel. Raymond, 66 N. E. 820, 821, 201 Ill. 545.

A liquor tax certificate, if not "property" in the strict sense in which that word is used, constitutes a "property right." In re Cullinan, 88 N. Y. Supp. 164, 166, 94 App. Div. 445 (citing Niles v. Mathusa, 47 N. Y. Supp. 88, 20 App. Div. 483; In re Lyman, 65 N. Y. Supp. 673, 53 App. Div. 380; Id., 69 N. Y. Supp. 309, 59 App. Div. 217).

Where the right to transfer a liquor license is recognized by statute, such license or right to transact the liquor business becomes a valuable "property right," subject to barter and sale. Deggender v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co., 83 Pac. 898, 899, 41 Wash. 385, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626.

The right to teach white and negro children in a private school at the same time and place is not a "property right." Berea College v. Commonwealth, 94 S. W. 623, 629, 123 Ky. 209, 124 Am. St. Rep. 344, 13 Ann. Cas. 837.

The right which a person has to pursue a lawful occupation or calling is a "property right." A prosecution for violating Greater N. Y. Charter (Laws 1901, p. 137, c. 466) § 317, denouncing the refusal of a bond broker to exhibit to a police officer certain property bonds, does not involve such a "property right." People v. Rosenberg, 112 N. Y. Supp. 316, 319, 59 Misc. Rep. 342 (citing Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 116, 122, 21 L. Ed. 394).

"The right to practice medicine is, like the right to practice any other profession, a valuable 'property right,' in which, under the Constitution and laws of the state, one is entitled to be protected and secured." Hewitt v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 84 Pac. 39-41, 148 Cal. 590, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 118 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750.

The office of attorney at law is not a "property right," but an extraordinary privilege, conferred on one in possession of certain moral and educational qualifications, and after admission he stands as an officer of the court, of which office he may not be deprived, except in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion and on proof of professional unfitness. In re Thatcher, 190 Fed. 969, 974.

While the right to labor or to practice a profession may be considered a "property right" for the purpose of protection, services already rendered by one person for another are not "property" for the purpose of enlarging or changing the ordinary remedies by which the indebtedness therefor may be recovered. Gleason v. Thaw, 185 Fed. 345, 347, 107 C. C. A. 463, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

The membership in the New York Stock Exchange is personal to the member, but the inchoate right of sale, if it may be so termed, and the right to the proceeds of the sale, if the Stock Exchange authorities shall permit that to be done, is a "property right" and a valuable one, and hence the right is one which, subject to the rules of the exchange board, passes to a receiver or trustee in bankruptcy during the member's lifetime, though the membership is personal to the member. Wrede v. Clark, 117 N. Y. Supp. 5, 7, 132 App. Div. 293.

Equity has no jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin others from making out affidavits against a merchant and arresting and fining him for alleged disturbance of the peace in using a megaphone to call attention to a clearance sale; there being no "property rights" involved in any proper sense of the word "property," and his rights being determinable by the law courts. Pleasants v. Smith, 43 South. 475, 476, 90 Miss. 440, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 773, 122 Am. St. Rep. 317.

A landowner's right to take fish and game on his own land, which inheres in him by reason of his ownership in the soil, is a "property right" subject to the state's ownership and title held to preserve and regulate for the public use. State v. Mallory, 83 S. W. 955, 959, 73 Ark. 236, 67 L. R. A. 773, 3 Ann. Cas. 852.

A priority to the use of water is a "property right," which is the subject of purchase and sale, and in its character and method of use may be changed, provided such change does not injuriously affect the rights of others. Seven Lakes Reservoir Co. v. New Loveland & Greeley Irrigation & Land Co., 93 Pac. 485, 486, 40 Colo. 382, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 329.

A riparian owner's shore rights and rights to access to and from his land and to navigation of the part of the river adjoining his land are "property rights," and subject as such to condemnation for public use, without appropriation of the land itself. State ex rel. Burrows v. Superior Court for Chehalis County, 93 Pac. 423, 425, 48 Wash.

A charter authorizing a corporation to organize subordinate councils of a beneficial association to raise funds for relief of members and their families and to defray funeral expenses and other cases of distress gives rise to possible rights of the "property" which are within the protection of a court of equity. National Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, v. State Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, 51 S. E. 166, 170, 104 Va. 197.

A false certificate of the birth of a child to one holding a life estate, with remainder to his issue, and, in the event of failure of issue, to complainant, was liable to affect the interest to be acquired by the complainant in the future by its use as evidence in some suit or proceeding by the infant, and therefore a "property right" to be acquired in the future was threatened, for which injunctive relief might be granted. Vanderbilt v. Mitchell, 67 Atl. 103, 72 N. J. Eq. 927.

Since a married woman's right to the affections of her husband is a "property right," and the loss thereof constitutes an injury to the consortium, a married woman, though living with her husband, may, without joining her husband, sue another married woman for alienating the affections of plaintiff's husband, under 14 Del. Laws, c. 550, providing that any married woman may prosecute and defend suits at law for the preservation and protection of her property as if unmarried. Eliason v. Draper (Del.) 77 Atl. 572, 576, 2 Boyce, 1.

An injunction will lie to restrain the unauthorized use of one's name by another as a part of its corporate title, or, in connection with its business or advertisements, his picture and his pretended certificate that a medicinal preparation, which such other is engaged in manufacturing, is compounded according to the formula devised by him, though he is not a business competitor. The basis for an injunction in such case is always injury to property or to "property rights." It may at times have been a matter of doubt whether what was called "property" was really such, and whether the injury thereto, actual or apprehended, forming the basis for injunctive relief, was not so shadowy as to be incapable of judicial cognizance. The insignificance of the right from a pecuniary standpoint does not always bar relief, and the term "property right" is not to be taken in any narrow sense, and the tendency of equity in cases of this character should be to extend rather than to restrict the jurisdiction. Edison v. Edison Polyform & Mfg. Co., 67 Atl. 392, 394, 396, 73 N. J. Eq. 136 (citing New Jersey State Dental Soc. v. Dentacura Co., 41 Atl. 672, 57 N. J. Eq. 594; Folsom v. Marsh, 9 Fed. Cas. 342; 2 Story, 100; Vanderbilt v. Mitchell, 67 Atl. 103, 72 N. J. Eq. 927).

Act Nov. 29, 1788, enabled owners of meadows already banked in to maintain such banks in repair at the expense of the owners to be apportioned among them. Held, that the act, being a proper exercise of legislative power, and the proceedings thereunder being completed and present owners having acquired their holdings with knowledge thereof, established such rights in such owners in the lands of each of the other owners as amounted to property, and Act March 1, 1904, amending the original act by providing that any owner after 10 years desirous of being relieved from the effect of proceedings under the original act might apply to the commissioners appointed, who should make a new order relieving applicant's meadow from further obligations under the original act, was violative of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as divesting the other owners of property rights without compensation, and without due process of law. Cox v. American Dredging Co., 77 Atl. 1025, 1026, 80 N. J. Law, 645.

Const. art. 15, § 8, provides that the right to divert and appropriate unappropriated waters of any natural stream for beneficial uses, shall never be denied, that priority of appropriation shall give the better right as between those using water, but that when the waters of such a stream are not sufficient for the service of all those desiring to use them, those taking the water for domestic purposes shall, subject to limitations prescribed by law, have preference over those claiming for any other purpose but that the usage by such subsequent appropriators shall be subject to article 1, § 14, providing that private property may be taken for public and certain private uses but not until a just compensation shall be paid therefor. Held that, under the section, the appropriation of water to a beneficial use is a constitutional right that the first in time is the first in right, without reference to the particular use, and that an appropriation for domestic use is superior to appropriations for other uses when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient for all those desiring it, and that the right to use for beneficial purposes is a "property right," subject to article 1, § 14. Montpelier Milling Co. v. City of Montpelier, 113 Pac. 741, 743, 19 Idaho, 212.

Where the benefit certificates of members of a fraternal insurance order, consisting of a supreme lodge and of subordinate lodges, were contracts between the Supreme Lodge and the individual members, and the subordinate lodges merely served as agencies through which members remitted their assessments, the suspension of a subordinate lodge did not affect property rights of members, who could continue their certificates by payment of assessments directly to the treasurer of the Supreme Lodge, and the suspension made without notice was not a violation of the Bill of Rights, declaring that no citizen shall be deprived of property except by due course of law. A fraternal insurance order, consisting of a supreme lodge and of subordinate lodges, had no capital stock and did not accumulate any funds beyond the amount required to discharge the benefits promised in its certificates. It had a relief fund charged with the payment of benefit certificates. The right to receive sick benefits was contingent on provision being made therefor by the subordinate lodge under its by-laws. A subordinate lodge was suspended without notice. There was nothing to show that it had provided for sick benefits. Held, that the suspension did not affect rights of property within the Bill of Rights, in the absence of any showing of any misappropriation of the relief fund, or in the absence of any loss of sick benefits, especially since the right to such benefits was merely an incident to membership. Lone Star Lodge No. 1,935, Knights and Ladies of Honor, v. Cole (Tex.) 131 S. W. 1180, 1185.

See Political Right.

PROPERTY RIGHT TO BE OWNED IN THE FUTURE

The accrued interest of an heir, though undivided, is not a "property right to be owned in the future," within the provisions of Porto Rico Mortgage Law, art. 108, defining things not mortgageable, as the property right in things which, although they will be owned in the future, are not yet recorded in the name of the person who will have a right to own them. Cabrera v. American Colonial Bank, 29 Sup. Ct. 623, 628, 214 U. S. 224, 53 L. Ed. 974.

PROPERTY TAKEN

The courts generally give to the words "property taken," in the Constitution, referring to eminent domain, a construction to include permanent damages to property. Ingram v. Maine Water Co., 57 Atl. 893, 894, 98 Me. 566.

PROPERTY TAX

The tax imposed by the transfer tax law is not a "property tax" (that is, one imposed by reason of the ownership of property), but is in the nature of an excise tax, to wit, on the transfer of property. In re Keeney's Estate, 87 N. E. 428, 429, 194 N. Y. 281 (citing In re Vanderbilt, 64 N. E. 782, 784, 172 N. Y. 69, 74).

The tax on bank stock provided by Rem. & Bal. Code, § 9134, is a "property tax," and not an "excise tax," its primary purpose being to raise revenue; and hence is subject to Const. art. 7, § 2, relative to uniformity in taxation on property. Spokane & Eastern Trust Co. v. Spokane County, 126 Pac. 54, 55, 70 Wash. 48.

A tax levy on property passing by will, by virtue of the act of 1894 (P. L. 1894, p. 318), is not a "property tax" within Const.

art. 4, § 7, par. 12, providing that property shall be assessed under general laws and by their uniform rules. Eastwood v. Russell, 81 Atl. 108, 109, 81 N. J. Law, 672.

The inheritance tax imposed by Laws 1901, p. 61, c. 62, § 1, is not a "property tax," but a tax imposed on the right of devolution and succession. Dixon v. Ricketts, 72 Pac. 947, 948, 26 Utah, 215 (citing and adopting In re Swift's Estate, 32 N. E. 1096, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L. R. A. 709; Knowlton v. Moore, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 178 U. S. 41-53, 44 L. Ed. 969; Strode v. Commonwealth, 52 Pa. 181).

A tax on the franchise of public service companies is a "property tax." Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co. v. Wilder, 29 Sup. Ct. 44, 45, 211 U. S. 137, 53 L. Ed. 121.

An ordinance requiring barber shops to pay a license of a certain sum on each chair, where more than two chairs are used, is not a "property tax," but an occupation tax. City of Louisville v. Schnell, 114 S. W. 742, 743, 131 Ky. 104, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 637.

An ad valorem tax laid on franchises of public service corporations is a "property tax"; their franchise being deemed "property." Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Capital Gas & Electric Light Co. (Ky.) 96 S. W. 870, 872.

A tax on the gross receipts of a street railroad company imposed as a condition to the exercise of the special privileges granted it is not a "property tax" but is a license fee. North Jersey St. R. Co. v. Jersey City, 67 Atl. 33, 34, 74 N. J. Law, 761.

Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082, provide that certain corporations, including gas companies, shall, in addition to other taxes, annually pay a tax on their franchise to the state and a local tax thereon to the county, town, etc., where the franchise is exercised; and each corporation shall report the amount of tangible property in the state, and where situated, and assessed and the fair cash value thereof; and the board of valuation and assessment is required to fix the value of the capital stock of each corporation and from such amount deduct the assessed value of all tangible property assessed in the state; the remainder to be the value of its corporate franchise subject to taxation, etc. By another provision all the property of domestic corporations, including intangible property considered in determining the value of the franchises, shall be subject to taxation unless exempt by the Constitution. Held, that within Const. § 174, requiring the property of corporations and natural persons to be similarly taxed, and allowing such further license, income and franchise taxes as the Legislature may deem proper, the tax on the franchise of a gas company was a "property tax" on the intangible property, and not a "privilege tax" for engaging in a business that natural persons could not, since under section 4082 natural persons engaged in such business are taxed as such corporations are. Commonwealth ex rel. Auditor's Agent v. Louisville Gas Co., 122 S. W. 164, 166, 135 Ky. 324.

Acts 1906, p. 549, entitled "An act relating to revenue and taxation providing for license taxes on compounded, rectified, adulterated or blended distilled spirits, known and designated as single stamp spirits, and providing penalties for violations of its provisions," and imposing a license tax on every wine gallon of compounded, rectified, blended, or adulterated spirits, etc., does not levy a "property tax," within Const. § 171, requiring taxes to be uniform on all property subject to taxation, but imposes a license tax, the amount of which is determined by the amount of spirits produced; the tax being on the business and not on the spirits. Brown-Foreman Co. v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 321, 323, 125 Ky. 402.

"Occupation taxes" are not "property taxes," and therefore are not subject to the restrictions imposed upon property taxation by statutes and Constitutions. A monthly license tax of $100 levied by a city on gas companies, regardless of the business done and the earnings, does not infringe Const. art. 13, § 1, requiring all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law, and defining property as including franchises, etc.; occupation taxes not falling within the constitutional provision. City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Independent Gas Co., 93 Pac. 1006, 1007, 152 Cal. 765 (citing and adopting People ex rel. Attorney General v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 252, 52 Am. Dec. 312).

PROPERTY TAXPAYER

"Property taxpayers," entitled to vote at a special municipal election, means the owners of property assessed, and a joint owner of realty is a "property taxpayer" to the extent of his interest. Endom v. City of Monroe, 36 South. 681, 683, 112 La. 779.

PROPERTY TO BE ADMINISTERED

See To Be Administered.

PROPERTY WITHIN CITY

The tax on personal securities as "money at interest" provided by the act of 1879 (P. L. 130) and its supplementary acts, making such property taxable, annually, for state purposes at the rate of four mills on each dollar of the value thereof, is a state tax, though a large part thereof is, under the statute, returned to the counties, and the personal securities upon which such tax is levied cannot be included in the assessed value of the "property therein," within Const. art. 9, § 8, limiting the borrowing power of a city to 2 per cent. upon the assessed value of the taxable property therein. Elliot v. City of Philadelphia, 79 Atl. 107, 110, 229 Pa. 215.

PROPERTY WITHIN THE STATE

See Property Not Within the State.

For the purpose of the collateral inheritance tax, shares of stock in a corporation organized under the laws of the state are "property within the state," without regard to the place of residence of the stockholder, or the place of deposit of the certificates of stock, or the location of the property owned by the corporation, or the place where its business is carried on. Nellson v. Russell, 69 Atl. 476, 478, 76 N. J. Law, 27.

Where a domestic corporation issued a "policy of life insurance" to a resident of another state, in which state the corporation had designated a person on whom process might be served, and the policy was never in this state, its proceeds, paid to a foreign executor of the insured, are not "property within the state," subject to a transfer tax. In re Gordon's Estate, 99 N. Y. Supp. 630, 631, 114 App. Div. 202.

Const. art. 8, § 1, requiring all property in the state owned by natural persons or corporations other than municipal to be taxed, etc., embraces every kind of "property within the state" over which the state has jurisdiction, whether owned by citizens or non-residents. Hall v. Miller, 115 S. W. 1168, 1170, 102 Tex. 289.

Deposits in foreign savings banks made by a resident of the state are "property within the state" within Laws 1905, p. 432, c. 40, imposing a collateral inheritance tax on all "property within the jurisdiction of the state," since the right created by the deposits is property constructively within the state, and passing under the will of the resident by force of the statute of wills, and the deposits are subject to the tax imposed, though they may be subject to a similar tax in a foreign state. Mann v. State Treasurer, 68 Atl. 130, 131, 74 N. H. 345, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150.

A vessel engaged in commerce on the high seas was "property in the state," within the meaning of Const. art. 13, § 1, relating to revenue and taxation, and was taxable in the city and county of San Francisco, where the managing owner of the vessel resided, although the vessel had been temporarily registered in Washington, and had received no permanent registration at San Francisco, and had never been in the waters of California, although some of her owners resided without the state. Olson v. City and County of San Francisco, 82 Pac. 850, 852, 148 Cal. 80, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197, 113 Am. St. Rep. 191, 7 Ann. Cas. 443.

Transfer Tax Law (Laws 1892, c. 399) § 1, provides that a tax shall be imposed on the transfer by will, or intestate law, of property within the state, where the decedent was a nonresident at the time of his death. Held, that bonds passing under the will of a non-resident pursuant to a power of appointment were not "property within the state" within such act, and subject to taxation because the bonds were secured by mortgages on lands located in New York. In re Fearing's Will, 93 N. E. 956, 958, 200 N. Y. 340.

Under the statute which provides for an inheritance tax upon all "property within the jurisdiction of this state," or any interest therein, which shall pass by will, descent, etc., whether belonging to an inhabitant or not, and whether tangible or intangible, a nonresident owner of shares of stock in a domestic corporation has an interest in "property within the jurisdiction of this state," which is subject to the tax. In re Culver's Estate, 123 N. W. 743, 745, 145 Iowa, 1, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 384.

A deposit in a bank, subject to withdrawal by check or surrender of the bank book, owned by a nonresident of the state at the time of his death, constitutes "property within the state," within Rev. Laws 1905, § 3627, authorizing administration of the estate of a nonresident leaving property in the state. In re Lansing's Estate, 131 N. W. 1010, 1011, 115 Minn. 73.

PROPIEDAD

The word "propiedad," used in the Spanish text of article 8 of the treaty of peace with Spain of Dec. 10, 1898, declaring that the cession of sovereignty "cannot in any respect impair the property or rights which, by law, belong to the peaceful possession of property of all kinds," etc., is defined by Escriche as the right to enjoy and dispose freely of one's things in so far as the laws do not prohibit it. 4 Escriche, 736. The same word appears in article 9, providing that Spanish subjects may retain, whether they remain or remove from the territory, "all their rights of property, including the right to sell or dispose of such property or of its proceeds." So it is inferred that the right to practice law was not embraced in the provision of article 8. Bosque v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 501, 504, 209 U. S. 91, 52 L. Ed. 698.

PROPONENT

"Generally speaking, a 'proponent' is one who propounds a will for probate." Any person interested may propound a will for probate. In re Jones' Estate, 106 N. W. 610, 612, 130 Iowa, 177.

PROPORTION

Const. c. 1, art. 9, providing that every member of society is bound to contribute "his proportion" toward the expense of the protection which the state affords him, is not contravened by Acts 1896, No. 46, taxing collateral inheritances; and this though estates not exceeding $2,000 are exempted. In re Hickok's Estate, 62 Atl. 724, 725, 78 Vt. 259.

PROPORTIONAL

"The word 'proportional,' in a provision for an assessment, means proportional to the special benefits received." Cheney v. Beverly, 74 N. E. 306, 308, 188 Mass. 81 (quoting and adopting definition in Hall v. Street Commissioners of Boston, 59 N. E. 68, 177 Mass. 434).

PROPORTIONAL SYSTEM

By "proportional system," as applied to taxation, is meant a tax at a fixed and uniform rate in proportion to the amount of taxable property based upon a cash valuation. State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 106 N. W. 93, 96, 97 Minn. 11, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732, 7 Ann. Cas. 1056.

PROPORTIONAL TARIFF

"Proportional tariffs" are a collection of freight rates which apply upon interstate shipments from certain points to certain other points, when the commodities shipped originate beyond the place of shipment or their ultimate destination is beyond the point to which the proportional rates apply. J. Rosenbaum Grain Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co., 130 Fed. 46, 47.

PROPORTIONATE MEASUREMENT

"Proportionate measurement" is defined as a "measurement having the same ratio to that recorded in the original field notes as the length of the chain used in the new measurement has to the length of the chain used in the original survey, assuming that the original measurement was correctly made." By actual measurement a county surveyor found that the south line of a section was longer than that returned by the governmental survey. He properly distributed the excess proportionately, for he could not conclude that the error arose in a part of the line, but was bound to conclude that it arose in and affected the whole line. Christ v. Fent, 84 Pac. 1074, 1076, 16 Okl. 375.

PROPOSAL

Offer of reward as proposal, see Reward. See, also, Offer.

An order given to a traveling salesman for goods is a mere "proposal" to buy, subject to withdrawal at any time before acceptance. Merchants' Exch. Co. v. Sanders, 84 S. W. 786, 787, 74 Ark. 16, 4 Ann. Cas. 935 (citing 1 Mechem, Sales, § 252).

A life insurance company furnished its agents a printed blank for use by applicants for insurance, which first had blanks, under the caption "Proposal for Insurance," to be filled and signed by applicants, next had a "memorandum for the solicitor to sign," followed by two questions as to amount of insurance now in force in the company and amount now applied for, and then, under the caption "Application for Insurance," questions as to health and other matters affecting the risk, to be answered over the signature of applicant, together with a declaration and warranty as to the representations and answers. Held, that neither the proposal for insurance nor the memorandum for the solicitor to fill was a part of the "application," within Rev. Laws, c. 118, § 73, requiring, as a condition to the insurer introducing the application in evidence, that a correct copy of it shall have been annexed to the policy. Bonville v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 85 N. E. 1057, 200 Mass. 197.

PROPOSE

PROPOSED ORDINANCE

Any proposed ordinance, see Any.

PROPOSITION

An assignment that the court erred in instructing to return a verdict for defendant, in receiving a verdict for defendant, and in entering judgment thereon that plaintiff pay the costs, did not constitute a "proposition" within the rules governing appeals. Olivarri v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Tex.) 116 S. W. 392.

PROPRIETARY

The word "disturb," according to Webster, means "to interrupt a settled state of," and "proprietary" means "belonging or pertaining to a proprietor, considered as property owned," and the words "the property shall not be disturbed or the proprietary rights of the owner divested" seem to mean that possession thereof shall not be taken, nor his property taken, nor shall the title thereof be divested, until compensation therefor has been first paid to the owner or into court for the owner. Edwards v. Thrash, 109 Pac. 832, 837, 26 Okl. 472, 138 Am. St. Rep. 975.

"Proprietary medicines," within a statute, making it an offense to practice medicine without having secured a certificate from the state board of medical examiners, but providing that it shall not prevent the advertising and sale of patent and proprietary medicine, means medicines which some person or company, other than a person indicted for prescribing certain medicines without a license, manufactured, advertised, and sold. State v. Kendig, 110 N. W. 463, 465, 133 Iowa, 164.

PROPRIETOR

See Riparian Proprietor.

The word "proprietor" signifies one who has the legal right or exclusive title in anything, whether in possession or not; an owner; the proprietor of a farm or mill. Elldridge v. Finnegan, 105 Pac. 334, 335, 25 Okl. 28, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

PROPRIETOR OF DRUG STORE

An information charging that accused was a druggist and the "proprietor of a drug store" and a pharmacist, and that he sold intoxicating liquors without a prescription, charges a violation of Rev. St. 1899, § 3047, making it an offense for a druggist, proprietor of a drug store, or pharmacist to sell intoxicating liquors except on a written prescription, and providing that any druggist who shall violate the act shall be punished as prescribed, and it is not duplicitous or multifarious, since the terms "druggist," "proprietor of a drug store," and "pharmacist" are synonymous, for the business of pharmacist or apothecary, or druggist, is one. State v. Clinkenbeard, 125 S. W. 827, 829, 142 Mo. App. 146.

PROPRIETOR OF RAILROAD

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, provides that an action for death may be brought where it is caused by the negligence of the "proprietor or owner of any railroad," or by the unfitness or negligence of his servants. Subdivision 2 provides for a recovery when the death is caused by the wrongful act, negligence, or default of another. A railroad maintained a hospital for the care of employes, and a surgeon employed by the road hired an incompetent nurse to care for a servant afflicted with smallpox, and the nurse went on the public streets without disinfecting himself, and communicated the disease to plaintiff's intestate, from which he died. Held, that the railroad company was not liable for the death, as the negligence of the surgeon could not be regarded as the negligence of the road itself, under subdivision 2 of the statute, and the first subdivision was not applicable, since the maintenance of the hospital was not peculiar to the carrier's business, but merely collateral thereto. When death is caused by the negligence of the "proprietor, or owner, of any railroad," the conveyance of goods or passengers limits liability to deaths caused in a business that is peculiar to the owner of a railroad. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Freeman, 79 S. W. 9, 15, 97 Tex. 394, 1 Ann. Cas. 481.

PROPRIETOR OF RESTAURANT

As person, see Person.

PROPRIETOR OF THEATER

"The 'proprietor of a theater' is a private individual, engaged in a strictly private business, which, though for the entertainment of the public, is always limited to those whom he may agree to admit to it. There is no duty, as in the case of a common carrier, to admit every one who may apply and be willing to pay for a ticket, for the theater proprietor has acquired no peculiar rights and privileges from the state, and is therefore under no implied obligation to serve the public. When he sells a ticket, he creates contractual relations with the holder of it, and, whatever duties on his part grow out of these relations, he is bound to perform, or respond in damages for the breach of his contract, if it is of that only that complaint can be made." Buensie v. Newport Amusement Ass'n, 68 Atl. 721, 723, 29 R. I. 23, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1242 (quoting and adopting definition in Horney v. Nixon, 61 Atl. 1088, 213 Pa. 20, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1184, 110 Am. St. Rep. 520, 5 Ann. Cas. 349).

PROPRIETY

The term "propriety" of the amount of damages, within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5645, providing that an appeal in condemnation proceedings shall bring before the Supreme Court the propriety and justness of the amount of damages, means the proper amount of the damages. State ex rel. McCormick v. Superior Court for Walla Walla County, 86 Pac. 205, 207, 43 Wash. 91.

PRORATING

"Prorating" means according to the measure which fixes proportions. It has no meaning unless referable to some rule or standard. State v. Boston & P. Exp. Co., 61 Atl. 697, 699, 100 Me. 278 (quoting Brombacher v. Berking, 39 Atl. 135, 56 N. J. Eq. 253).

PROSECUTE

See Duly Prosecuted; To Be Prosecuted.

To "prosecute" an action includes the bringing, as well as the carrying on, of the action. Inhabitants of Great Barrington v. Gibbons, 85 N. E. 737, 199 Mass. 527.

The word "prosecute," within Gen. St. 1909, § 8906, providing that the Attorney General shall appear for the state in certain cases, implies the commencement, as well as the continuance, of a proceeding; and the term is so used in common speech, as well as in legal parlance. State ex rel. Stubbs v. Dawson, 119 Pac. 360, 364, 86 Kan. 180, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 993.

Ordinarily an attorney's contract to "prosecute" an action includes the commencement thereof, and is not confined to the pursuit of the remedy thereafter. Cheshire v. Des Moines City R. Co., 133 N. W. 324, 325, 153 Iowa, 88.

One who aids, abets, or procures the burning of a building may be charged in the indictment and tried as a principal offender, the word "prosecuted" in Rev. St. § 6804, being broad enough to cover all the proceedings. Hutchinson v. State, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 595, 599.

To "prosecute" is to proceed against judicially, and a "prosecution" is the act of conducting or waging a proceeding in court; the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due process of law. It is also defined as the institution or commencement and continuance of a criminal suit; the process of exhibiting formal charges against an offender before a legal tribunal, and pursuing them to final judgment on behalf of the state or government, as by indictment or information. State v. Bowles, 79 Pac. 726, 728, 70 Kan. 821, 69 L. R. A. 176.

The word "prosecuted," as used in Pub. Acts 1906, No. 89, includes the institution of a suit, and is not confined to the mere pursuit of a remedy after proceedings have been instituted. It provides that in all actions for negligent injury to persons hereafter prosecuted by the executor or administrator of the injured person, under the statute declaring that such action shall survive, the measure of damages shall be fair and just compensation for the pecuniary injury, etc. It does no violence to the language used in the act to construe the word "prosecuted" as meaning the complete prosecution, including the institution of the suit. Davis v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 111 N. W. 76, 77, 147 Mich. 479.

Rev. St. 1908, § 904, provides that no foreign corporation may do any business or prosecute or defend in any suit in this state until the fee prescribed has been paid to the Secretary of State, and section 910 provides that no foreign corporation shall do any business or prosecute or defend in any suit in this state until it receives from the Secretary of State a certificate that full payment of fees required has been made by it. Held, that an attempted suit by a foreign corporation doing business within the state without having paid the fee required would not suspend the running of limitations, since a corporation not complying with the statutes cannot institute suit in this state; the word "prosecute," as used, meaning to bring suit against in a court for redress of wrong, to carry on a judicial proceeding against, or to seek to enforce a claim or right by legal process. Western Electrical Co. v. Pickett, 118 Pac. 988, 990, 51 Colo. 415, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1322.

PROSECUTE TO OR WITH EFFECT

Where the defendant, in a suit to foreclose a contract for the purchase of real estate by an appeal, secured a modification of the decree below, allowing him a substantial extension of time within which to make the deferred payments and protect his rights under the contract, his appeal was "prosecuted to effect," within the meaning of the condition of his supersedeas bond. Crane v. Buckley, 128 Fed. 22, 70 C. C. A. 452 (citing Buckley v. Crane, 123 Fed. 29, 33, 59 C. C. A. 109).

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 1004, providing that no temporary injunction shall issue until the applicant therefor shall give bond to answer all damages in case the plaintiff shall fail to "prosecute the action to effect," etc., the quoted words mean that plaintiff must obtain a final decision that he is entitled to the injunction, or some equivalent order, and hence prosecution to a judgment afterwards vacated is not a prosecution to effect under the statute, since when a judgment is set aside it is entirely destroyed, and the rights of the parties as to the issues tried are left as if no such judgment had ever been entered. Lawlor v. Merritt, 72 Atl. 143, 144, 81 Conn. 715.

As with success

A stipulation in a bail bond on appeal to "prosecute with effect" means to prosecute with success, and, when the bond contains distinct and independent conditions, the breach of any one condition works a forfeiture. Commonwealth v. Lenhart, 82 Atl. 777, 778, 283 Pa. 526.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY

As public officer, see Officer.

Under the laws of Kansas, the "prosecuting attorney" is always the county attorney (Gen. St. pp. 283, 284, §§ 135-137); that is, every criminal action prosecuted in the name of the state must be prosecuted by the county attorney, who is the public prosecutor. For the purpose of prosecuting criminal actions, the prosecuting attorney and the county attorney is one and the same person. As used in the new Code, the words "prosecuting attorney" were designed to embrace both the district attorney, who would have authority to prosecute until the next general election, and the county attorney would then be the local attorney. State v. Bowles, 79 Pac. 726, 727, 70 Kan. 821, 69 L. R. A. 176.

The "prosecuting or state's attorney," as he is designated in this state, is an expansion of the old English office of Attorney General. He conducts suits on behalf of the central government. The colonies each had an Attorney General, and Connecticut in the early part of the eighteenth century established local assistants to the Attorney General, and from this beginning the present system of public prosecuting officers has been established. Their most important duties are connected with criminal prosecutions, which are brought in the name of the state, and the prosecuting attorney in such cases is acting as the agent of the state, and not as a local officer. Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 982, 982, 16 N. D. 470 (citing Fairlie, Local Government, p. 104).

A bond given by a contractor with the United States for the construction of a rip-rap breakwater, and conditioned as required by Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, for the payment by the contractor of persons "supplying him with labor or materials in the prosecution of the work," covers the claims of laborers employed by him in quarrying the stone used and in transporting it to the breakwater, regardless of whether the work was done near by or at a distance. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. United States ex rel. Bartlett, 189 Fed. 339, 342, 111 C. C. A. 71.

Where a policy provided for indemnity in case insured by reason of injury should be immediately and wholly disabled and prevented from prosecuting any and every kind of business for a period of not less than a week, the word "prosecution" indicated that the parties intended that the insured, in order to recover benefits, should be wholly disabled from doing that business which he had the ability to prosecute, and hence the term "disabled from prosecuting any and every kind of business" did not mean that insured who was a day laborer and able to do only manual work, could not recover because he was not so disabled as to be prevented from performing mental activities if he had the requisite education, and he was therefore wholly disabled within the policy when he was incapacitated from performing manual labor. Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Hawkins, 127 S. W. 457, 459, 94 Ark. 417, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635, 21 Ann. Cas. 1029.

"Prosecution of business" means a continuance of business. Insurance Law (Laws 1892, p. 1958, c. 690), § 56, providing that no judgment for an accounting or decree or order restraining or enjoining the prosecution of an insurance company's business or interfering therewith shall be made, does not prevent the bringing by a stockholder and policy holder in an insurance company of an action to compel the directors thereof to repay to the company funds wasted by them. No direct interference or stoppage of business can result from an interlocutory decree for an accounting. While it might become necessary as a consequence of the decree to have reference to the society's books and papers in order to determine the sums of money which some of the directors have unlawfully received and are owing, that would involve a mere incidental inconvenience which might occur whenever the society itself sought to collect a debt. Young v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 99 N. Y. Supp. 446, 453, 49 Misc. Rep. 347 (citing Uhlman v. New York Life Ins. Co., 17 N. E. 363, 109 N. Y. 421, 4 Am. St. Rep. 482).

To "prosecute" is to proceed against judicially. A "prosecution" is the act of conducting or waging a proceeding in court; the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law. It is also defined as the institution or commencement and continuance of a criminal suit; the process of exhibiting formal charges against an offender before a legal tribunal, and pursuing them to final judgment on behalf of the state or government, as by indictment or information. State v. District Court of Burleigh County, 124 N. W. 417, 420, 19 N. D. 819, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 935.

A "prosecution" is the act of conducting or waging a proceeding in court; the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due process of law. It is also defined as the institution or commencement and continuance of a criminal suit; the process of exhibiting formal charges against an offender before a legal tribunal, and pursuing them to final judgment on behalf of the state or government, as by indictment or information. *State v. Rev. St. U. S. § 190, providing that it shall not be lawful for any officer, clerk, or employé in any of the departments to act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States which was pending in either of the departments while he was such officer, clerk, or employé, nor to aid in the prosecution of any such claim within two years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer, clerk, or employé, prohibits not merely the prosecution of claims by lawsuit, but the collection of such claims in any manner. Van Metre v. Nunn, 133 N. W. 1012, 1014, 116 Minn. 444.

"The condition in plaintiff's undertaking on commencing an action in claim and delivery for the 'prosecution of the action,' etc., as prescribed by section 5334, Rev. Codes 1899, is broken if plaintiff fails to prosecute the action to a final termination on the merits, whether his failure to do so is due to his own fault or to the fault of the justice of the peace, before whom the action is pending, in entering up a void judgment." Siebolt v. Konatz Saddlery Co., 106 N. W. 564, 565, 15 N. D. 87.

Criminal proceeding

A "prosecution for contempt" of court is a criminal proceeding, so that defendant is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt as to his guilt. Connell v. State, 114 N. W. 294, 299, 80 Neb. 296.

Proceedings for the seizure and condemnation of liquors alleged to be unlawfully kept for sale are not "prosecutions for criminal offenses" within the constitutional provision giving a right to trial by jury in such prosecutions, but are civil proceedings in rem to fix the status of the property. State v. Intoxicating Liquor, 73 Atl. 586, 587, 82 Vt. 287.

"Prosecution," as used in Pen. Code, § 285, making the subsequent intermarriage of the parties a bar to a "prosecution" for seduction, "includes every step taken in a criminal action from and including the indictment to and including the final judgment, and a bar to a prosecution is the destruction forever of the right to take any of those steps after the bar became effective. People ex rel. Scharff v. Frost, 91 N. E. 376, 378, 198 N. Y. 110, 139 Am. St. Rep. 801 (dissenting opinion of Judge Vann).

As used in an act relating to the taking of testimony of witnesses in criminal cases, which provides that the testimony of witnesses taken in writing shall be sworn to and signed by the witness and attested by the officer taking the same, and returned by such officer without delay into court, together with the notice of the taking of the testimony, with such officer's return of service annexed and attached thereto in which the prosecution is pending, etc., the term "prosecution pending" means accusation or charge pending. State v. Jackson, 35 South. 593, 598, 111 La. 343.

Revisal 1905, § 2768, allows the solicitor, for "every conviction on an indictment which he shall prosecute for a capital crime," $20 to be taxed against defendant, but where he is insolvent the solicitor's fee shall be one-half to be paid by the county, "except that for convictions in capital felonies," forgery, perjury and conspiracy, he shall receive full fees. On trial of an indictment for murder in the first degree the solicitor stated that he would only ask for a conviction of murder in the second degree, which was not a capital crime, and the conviction was for that degree. Held, that the prosecution was for a capital crime, "prosecution being the whole or any part of the procedure which the law provides for bringing offenders to justice," but as there was no conviction of a capital crime the solicitor's fee could be only $10. State v. Mayhew, 71 S. E. 447, 448, 155 N. C. 477 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5737).

Same—Complaint or indictment

The words "prosecution" or "proceeding," in the connection in which used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2041, making every person, who shall deter a witness from giving evidence in a cause, guilty of a misdemeanor, provided that, if the cause be a "prosecution" or "proceeding" against any one for a felony, the punishment shall be imprisonment in the penitentiary or in the county jail, or by fine, mean a prosecution by indictment or information or on an affidavit on which accused has been charged before an examining magistrate, and by no fair intentment can either of them be held to mean a mere inquity by the grand jury as to the commission of an offense. State ex rel. Butler v. Foster, 86 S. W. 245, 251, 187 Mo. 590.

Proceedings for penalties

A penal action, or action to recover a penalty, is not, in the language of a constitutional provision, a "prosecution by indictment or information," so as to entitle the party to a jury trial in the first instance. Reagh v. Spann (Ala.) 3 Stew. 100, 107.

The word "prosecutions," in Const. art. 5, § 31, providing that all writs and processes shall run and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name of the state, applies to indictments for crime, and does not affect suits under penal statutes, which may be brought in the name of any person in the manner provided by the statute creating the same. Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 52 S. E. 644, 646, 73 S. C. 36 (citing Ward v. Tyler [S. C.] 1 Nott & McC. 22).

Criminal contempt being classified by statute as a misdemeanor, and the punishment therefor regulated by statute, a prosecution therefor is a "prosecution to recover a penalty," within the one-year statute of limitations. Gordon v. Commonwealth, 133 S. W. 206, 208, 141 Ky. 461.

Prosecutions under municipal ordinances

Under Const. 1901, § 170, providing that all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name of the state, the provision in section 96 of Acts 1911, p. 288, regulating the sale of liquor, that nothing in the act shall affect any "prosecution" pending before the courts of the state, does not apply to quasi criminal cases for the violation of municipal ordinances. City of Birmingham v. Baranco, 58 South. 944, 945, 4 Ala. App. 279.

Laws 1899, p. 273, § 9, provides that one practicing medicine without a license shall forfeit to the state, for the use of the State Board of Health, $100 for the first offense to be recovered in an action of debt. Const. art. 6, § 33, requires all prosecutions to conclude "against the peace and dignity" of the state. Held, that an action of debt for the penalty for practicing medicine without a license was not a "prosecution" within the constitutional requirement, so that it need not conclude against the peace and dignity of the state; a "prosecution" being the institution and continuance of a criminal proceeding, as by indictment and information, in which sense the word is used in the Constitution. People v. Gartenstein, 94 N. E. 128, 129, 248 Ill. 546.

PROSECUTOR

A "prosecutor" is one who instigates a prosecution, by making an affidavit charging a named person with the commission of a penal offense, on which a warrant is issued or an indictment or accusation is based.

Eady v. State, 74 S. E. 303, 10 Ga. App. 818 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5739).

PROSPECT

PROSPECTIVE ADVANTAGE

By the words "prospective advantage," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 4475, in relation to bribery, and making it an offense to receive any pecuniary or other personal advantage, either present or prospective, is intended a promise of future delivery of some of the specified articles of value. Schutz v. State, 104 N. W. 90, 92, 125 Wis. 452.

PROSPECTIVE RIGHT

A "prospective right" is not yet a right. It is only an expectation having a certain intensity of reasonableness. When the Texas Pacific Railroad filed its map of general route, and the Secretary of the Interior withdrew the odd sections along its route from sale or settlement in accordance with an act of Congress granting such sections to the railroad, the road had a "prospective right" to the land. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 23 Sup. Ct. 567, 568, 189 U. S. 447, 450, 47 L. Ed. 896.

PROSPECTIVE VALUE

The "prospective value" of mining property is the value with reference to which the capitalization of a corporation organized to develop such property is fixed, is the value which in the judgment of the parties the property actually has, but which development is necessary to disclose. Speer v. Bordeleau, 79 Pac. 332, 334, 20 Colo. App. 413 (quoting Buck v. Jones, 70 Pac. 951, 18 Colo. App. 250).

PROSTITUTE

See Common Prostitute.

Evidence that a woman was living with a man without being married to him did not show that the woman was a "prostitute" as commonly understood. Van Dalsen v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 89 S. W. 255, 256.

PROSTITUTION

See House of Common Prostitution; Leading Life of Prostitution and Lewdness.

"Prostitution" is the common lewdness of a woman for gain, or the offering of her person to indiscriminate intercourse with man, while lewdness is unlawful indulgence of the animal desire. State v. Porter, 107 N. W. 923, 924, 130 Iowa, 690.

PROTECT—PROTECTION

"Protect" is defined as follows: "To guard; shield; preserve." Webst. Int. Dict.

"To cover or shield from danger, harm, damage, trespass, exposure, insult, temptation, or the like; defend; guard; preserve in safety. Synonyms: Defend; shield; screen; secure." Cent. Dict. "To cover, shield, or defend from injury, harm, or danger of any kind." Enc. Dict. An instruction that a servant could presume that the master would use ordinary care to "protect" the servant placed too great a burden upon the master, since he is only bound to use reasonable care to provide a reasonably safe place of work, reasonably safe appliances, and to use reasonable care in selecting fellow servants. Reino v. Montana Mineral Land Development Co., 90 Pac. 853, 855, 38 Mont. 291.

The word "protect," as used in a bond accompanying a deed, wherein the obligor covenanted to "protect" the lands conveyed from levy and sale under a certain judgment, is equivalent to, or at least includes, "defend against attack," which is one meaning of "protect." The contract was not that the lands should not be sold under judgment but that the vendor would "protect" them against sale. This required him to defend in suit, to enforce the judgment by sale of the lands, unless he can make it appear that such defense was not reasonably necessary for the protection of the lands. Mettlar v. Conover (N. J.) 65 Atl. 464, 465.

Under the constitution of a brotherhood of painters, providing that the initiation fee paid by an applicant for membership must accompany the application and be returned in case the applicant is rejected, with a proviso that, if the fee is paid in installments while the applicant is working at his trade and receiving the protection of the brotherhood, such payments shall be forfeited to the brotherhood if the applicant has made any false statements or is unable to qualify as a member, the fact that the brotherhood, having no right to interfere, does not interfere with employment by an applicant at his trade pending his application does not constitute "protection" extended by the brotherhood to him, and was not in a legal sense a benefit to him. Levin v. Cosgrove, 67 Atl. 1070, 1071, 75 N. J. Law, 344.

An information charging a city marshal with willful and malicious misconduct in office, in that he gave aid, comfort, protection, and assistance to keepers of bawdyhouses, must by the protection referred to be construed to mean protection against an effort of the public officers to enforce the law against them, and it is not necessary to the sufficiency of the information that such conduct be expressly characterized as either willful or malicious. State v. Dixon, 103 Pac. 130, 131, 80 Kan. 650.

Act No. 83 of 1908, as amended by Act No. 48 of 1910, § 3, created the juvenile court, and provided that it should have jurisdiction of the trial of all children under 17 charged as neglected or delinquent children, except for capital crimes, and of all persons charged with contributing to the neglect or delinquency of children under 17, or with a violation of any law then in existence or thereunder enacted for the protection of the physical, moral, or mental well-being of children, not punishable by death or hard labor, together with all cases of desertion or nonsupport of children by their parents. Held, that such courts had no jurisdiction to try accused for an assault committed on a delinquent minor child; the expression "law enacted for the protection of children" being limited to those laws relating to their physical, moral, and mental well-being, not including general laws prohibiting assault and battery, affecting both adults and children. State v. Jacobs, 57 South. 905, 130 La. 245.

PROTECTION OF LAW

PROTEST

Importers so changed the form of invoicing as to increase the amount of duty payable, this being done to comply with a rule which had been established by the Board of General Appraisers, but which the courts subsequently held illegal. Held, that as the action of the importers had been without protest and the customs officers had not raised or changed the invoices, nor directed or requested that to be done, there had been no legal compulsion or duress. With no protest other than an oral complaint, importers acquiesced in customs ruling that involved an increase in the duties on their goods. Held, that there had not been such a "protest" as is contemplated by Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 21, 18 Stat. 190, making the settlement of duties final "in the absence of protest." Gulbenkian v. United States, 175 Fed. 860, 865.

PROTEST (In Commercial Law)

See Duly Protested.

The term "protest" includes in a popular sense all the steps necessary to fix the liability of a drawer or indorser on the dishonor of commercial paper, and to which he is a party, or, accurately speaking, it is the solemn declaration on the part of the holder against any loss to be sustained by him by reason of the nonacceptance or even nonpayment, as the case may be, of the bill in question. Sherman v. Ecker, 100 N. Y. Supp. 678, 679, 58 Misc. Rep. 456.

A complaint in an action on a note, which states that the note was duly presented for payment at the time and place designated thereon and payment thereof demanded and refused, that said note was duly protested, and that due notice of the protest of said note was duly given to the defendants and each of them, is sufficient as against a demurrer by an indorser on the ground that it did not show the giving of notice of presentment, demand, nonpayment, and protest, notwithstanding Neg. Inst. Law, Laws 1897, p. 739, c. 612, § 160, providing than an indorser to whom no notice of dishonor has been given is discharged; for pleadings must be liberally construed, and the term "protest" includes in a popular sense all the steps taken to fix the liability of an indorser upon the dishonor of a commercial paper to which he is a party, and "duly" in legal parlance means according to law, and does not relate to form only, but includes both form and substance. Sherman v. Ecker, 110 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 59 Misc. Rep. 216.

Presentment and refusal

A "protest" is a formal statement in writing that the described instrument was on a certain day presented for payment or acceptance, and that such payment or acceptance was refused. It is a formal declaration executed by a notary, which in its popular sense means all the steps and acts accompanying the dishonor of a bill or note necessary to charge an indorser. Peabody v. Citizens' State Bank of St. Charles, 108 N. W. 272, 275, 98 Minn. 302 (citing 7 Cyc. p. 1051).

PROTEST, PAYMENT UNDER

A mere declaration by one at the time he pays money that the payment is made "under protest" does not show that the payment is not voluntary. Town of Phebus v. Manhattan Social Club, 52 S. E. 839, 840, 105 Va. 144.

Where a liquor license fee was not imposed without authority or contrary to law, a payment of the fee under protest was not within Comp. Laws 1907, § 2684, authorizing the recovery of licenses unlawfully imposed. Williams v. Summit County (Utah) 123 Pac. 938, 940.

PROTESTANT

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL JURISDICTION

The phrase "Protestant Episcopal jurisdiction," in a will whereby testator made a bequest in trust to T., missionary bishop of Idaho and Utah, his successors, in fee, to erect therewith a church at such place within his Episcopal jurisdiction as he or his successors should elect, with a further sum bequeathed to build a rectory for the rector of such church, to be the property of the aforesaid "Protestant Episcopal jurisdiction," does not refer to a natural or artificial person, entitled to, or taking title to, property. Mount v. Tuttle, 91 N. Y. Supp. 195, 198, 99 App. Div. 433.

PROVABLE

The term "provable," in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68b, 30 Stat. 565, providing that a set-off or counterclaim shall not be allowed in favor of any debtor of the bankrupt which is not provable against the estate, means "provable" in its nature at the time when the set-off is claimed, not provable in the pending bankruptcy proceedings. The provision of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, 30 Stat. 561, limiting the time for proving claims to one year, has reference to the bankruptcy proceedings alone, and, if the claim of a creditor, who is also a debtor, of the estate is one provable in its nature, the fact that he has not proved it within the year does not affect his right to plead it as a set-off or counterclaim, in an action by the trustee to recover his indebtedness to the estate as a claim "provable against the estate," within the meaning of section 68b. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Graham, 145 Fed. 809, 813, 76 C. C. A. 385 (citing Morgan v. Wordell, 59 N. E. 1037, 178 Mass. 350, 55 L. R. A. 33).

PROVABLE CLAIM

A debt barred by limitations is not a "provable claim" within the bankruptcy act. In re Putman, 193 Fed. 464, 467.

A money decree for alimony, rendered in a proceeding for divorce and alimony, is not a "provable claim," under the bankruptcy statute of the United States of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. 544, c. 541). Hence a discharge in bankruptcy does not work a satisfaction of such decree. Lemert v. Lemert, 74 N. E. 194, 195, 72 Ohio St. 364, 106 Am. St. Rep. 621, 2 Ann. Cas. 914.

Where a buyer's bankruptcy resulted in its breach of an express written contract for the sale of burners, the seller's damages were unliquidated and constituted a "provable claim" against the bankrupt's estate, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a, 30 Stat. 562, providing that debts of the bankrupt may be proved and allowed against his estate which are founded on a contract, express or implied. In re Duquesne Incandescent Light Co., 176 Fed. 785, 791.

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy may be based upon a claim for unliquidated damages arising out of a breach of warranty on the sale of personalty, though, by the provision of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 59b, such petitions may be filed only by creditors who have "provable claims," since, if the claim is of a kind that can be proved in bankruptcy, this provision is satisfied; and the claim in question is provable under section 63a of that act, as founded upon a contract, even if, in case of fraud, there may be an independent claim purely in tort. Frederic L. Grant Shoe Co. v. W. M. Laird Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 332, 333, 212 U. S. 445, 53 L. Ed. 591.

Under the statute relating to provable claims against a decedent's estate, a claim to be provable, must have been a good cause of action against decedent in his lifetime. A decedent in his lifetime employed an agent to negotiate the purchase of mining property of a corporation, and, before the agent had completed the purchase, the agency was terminated. Before its termination, the agent had, pursuant to the agreement, bought a great number of shares of the corporate stock which caused him financial loss. Held, that the agent had a "provable claim" for the loss sustained though the agency was terminated. Briggs v. Chamberlain, 107 Pac. 1082, 1086, 47 Colo. 382, 135 Am. St. Rep. 223.

PROVABLE DEBT

Debt as including, see Debt.

The expression "provable debts," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 274, § 50, includes all claims against the insolvent which may be proved under the insolvency act; the word "debts" being used in its generic and not in its strict legal sense. Hebert v. Handy, 72 Atl. 1102, 1103, 29 R. I. 543 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Brouillard, 40 Atl. 762, 20 R. I. 617).

"Provable debts," as used in Gen. Laws, c. 274, § 50, providing that a discharge in insolvency shall release an insolvent from all his provable debts, should be construed to include all claims against an insolvent which may be proved under section 28, providing that claims "growing out of trover, replevin, or any tort" may be proved against an insolvent. In re Brouillard, 40 Atl. 762, 20 R. I. 617.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, 30 Stat. 562, defines the debts of the bankrupt which may be proved against his estate to consist of a fixed liability, evidenced by a judgment or an instrument in writing absolutely owing at the time the petition was filed, whether then payable or not, claims founded on an open account or on a contract, express or implied, and declares that unliquidated claims against the bankrupt may be liquidated pursuant to an application to the court in such manner as it shall direct, and may thereafter be proved against the estate. Held, that where claimant was an employé of the bankrupt under contract which had many months to run at the time of the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition, and he was paid his salary up to the time the petition was filed, the subsequent breach of the contract having been the result of the operation of the bankruptcy act, though the causes permitting the intervention were chargeable to the bankrupt, the claim was not allowable. In re American Vacuum Cleaner Co., 192 Fed. 939, 940.

"Provable debts," as defined by Bankr. Act 1898, § 63, includes debts arising upon contracts, express or implied, and open accounts, as well as for judgments and costs. A claim arising out of the conversion by stockbrokers of shares, purchased and held by them on a customer's account, charging him with commission and interest, and crediting him with amounts received as margins, is a "provable debt," under Bankr. Act 1898, § 63a, as a debt "founded upon an open account or upon a contract, express or implied." Crawford v. Burke, 25 Sup. Ct. 9, 10, 195 U. S. 176, 49 L. Ed. 147.

The words "provable debts," as used in section 17 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his "provable debts," except such as are enumerated therein, are used in a sense broad enough to include, in the case of taxes, demands against a bankrupt, which, although not strictly or technically "provable," are nevertheless allowable out of his estate. In re United Button Co., 140 Fed. 495, 501.

A "provable debt" is a sum of money absolutely owing at the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, certainly, and in all events payable without regard to the fact whether then due, past due, or to become due; that is, it must be, at the date of the bankruptcy, a fixed liability. This does not have reference to unliquidated demands and claims of creditors holding securities. Where the landlord of a bankrupt has a lien on the leased premises for rent due and to become due for the current contract year, the lien is enforceable against the trustee in bankruptcy for rent to become due during the remainder of the contract year in which the bankruptcy occurs, and which has become due prior to the adjudication of the claim. Martin v. Orgain, 174 Fed. 772, 778, 98 C. C. A. 246 (quoting and adopting definition from In re Smith, 146 Fed. 923).

A judgment for negligent death is a debt "provable" in bankruptcy under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a(1), 30 Stat. 562, as a fixed liability evidenced by judgment. In re Putman, 193 Fed. 464, 468.

A stockholder's liability for an unpaid stock subscription is a "debt provable" in bankruptcy under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a(4), 30 Stat. 563, as a debt founded on contract. In re Putman, 193 Fed. 464, 468.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, 30 Stat. 545, giving courts of bankruptcy jurisdiction at law and in equity, equitable claims are provable if within the purview of the general rules of equity, even though they have no status at law. In re Putman, 193 Fed. 464, 472.

The probability that one who has retained title to a horse, which has been sold by the buyer to a third person under a warranty of title, will retake the horse, and that thereby a breach of the warranty will result, is not a "provable debt" within the bankruptcy act, to which a discharge in bankruptcy is a good defense. Baker v. Hooks, 64 S. E. 573, 6 Ga. App. 121.

The contingent liability of an accommodation indorser on a note falling due after a petition in bankruptcy, but before time for filing proof of claims, is a provable "debt on a contract express or implied," under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63a4, 30 Stat. 563; and hence, though not proved, is discharged by the discharge of the indorser in the bankruptcy proceedings, under section 17. Cohen v. Pecharsky, 121 N. Y. Supp. 602, 603, 67 Misc. Rep. 72.

A debt created by a loan to the bankrupt by a creditor after adjudication in bankruptcy to be used in complying with the terms of a composition, the bankrupt agreeing to pay to such creditor when the composition was confirmed the balance of such loan after deducting therefrom the creditor's share of the consideration of the confirmation, was not a "provable debt" in the bankruptcy proceedings within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550, § 17a. Zavelo v. J. S. Reeves & Co., 54 South. 654, 656, 171 Ala. 401.

Where claimant procured a divorce and a decree for alimony in South Dakota, and subsequently sued thereon in New York and obtained judgment for alimony due, after which the debtor scheduled the New York judgment as an indebtedness in bankruptcy proceedings, such judgment was a "provable debt," under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 63, 30 Stat. 562, 563, defining claims dischargeable to include a fixed liability evidenced by a judgment absolutely owing at time of filing the petition. In re Williams' Estate, 118 N. Y. Supp. 562, 566.

A debt is not allowable in bankruptcy, unless it is provable; but it may be provable, without being allowable. Allowability implies, not only provability, but also validity; and if for any reason the claim is improper, or if there is a good defense to it, it is not allowable, though it may be provable, as a debt. R. P. Williams & Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 75 S. E. 1067, 1070, 11 Ga. App. 635.

Under a charge to the grand jury that, if what was alleged in certain affidavits shall be proven before your body, then it will be the duty of the grand jury to find a bill of indictment for the misdemeanor against the parties guilty thereof, it is fair to presume that the grand jury understood the phrase "proven before your body" to mean proven by legal evidence, and by the amount or weight of evidence that would support an indictment in any case. People v. Glen, 66 N. E. 112, 115, 173 N. Y. 395.

The words "to have the will proved," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1299, authorizing enumerated persons to petition the court having jurisdiction "to have the will proved," mean no more than that the court shall hear all evidence offered in proof or disproof of the will, and, if on any material matter there is a failure to offer evidence, the production of it shall be had at the instance of the court itself, in order to satisfy the court, under section 1317, of the testamentary capacity of testator and the lack of duress or undue influence. In re Edwards' Estate, 97 Pac. 23, 24, 154 Cal. 91.

The word "proven," in a stipulation by the city attorney, on the hearing of an application for an order confirming a reassessment, that the allegations of relator's answer to the effect that the improvement was of no benefit to their property were "proven," is not equivalent to an admission that the improvement was in fact no benefit, and is construed as a concession that evidence to that effect had been introduced for the consideration of the court, thus making it, in connection with the determination of the board of public works that the improvement was a benefit, a question of fact for the court. State ex rel. Lownsberry v. District Court of Blue Earth County, 113 N. W. 697, 701, 102 Minn. 482.

PROVE SATISFACTORY

In an action for the price of machinery, which, by the terms of sale, is to "prove satisfactory" to the purchaser, it is not enough to show that he ought to be satisfied, or that others are satisfied with it. The contract requires satisfaction on his part. On the other hand, the operation of the machinery to the satisfaction of the purchaser must be understood as meaning a satisfactory result in the production of a marketable commodity, when it is properly operated; and this implies an adequate test, made in good faith, under suitable conditions, by a competent operator, to determine whether such a result will be obtained. Delahunty Dyeing Mach. Co. v. Pennsylvania Knitting Mills, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 433, 434.

PROVED CLAIM

A claim against a bankrupt is "proved" and entitled to allowance only when it is properly verified and gives "the consideration" therefor and contains the other statements required by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57a, 30 Stat. 560. In re Coventry Evans Furniture Co., 166 Fed. 516, 523.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 55e, 30 Stat. 560, provides for the calling of meetings of creditors whenever one-fourth or more in number who have "proven" their claims shall file a written request therefor. Held that, though the term "proven" does not necessarily mean allowance, a claim cannot be regarded as "proven," within such section, until the written proof required by section 57a (30 Stat. 560) shall have been filed or lodged with the court or some officer thereof. In re Back Bay Automobile Co., 158 Fed. 679, 686.

PROVED ORDER

In an action under a contract to pay $4, an order for subscriptions obtained by plaintiff to defendant's serials, in which defendant claimed that plaintiff was to receive $4 for every good or "proved order," which meant a subscription upon which at least ten numbers of the serial subscribed for should be delivered and accepted, evidence was inadmissible to show that in the trade the words "$4 an order" meant "$4 for a 'proved order.'" Newhall v. Appleton, 6 N. E. 120, 102 N. Y. 133.

PROVIDE—PROVIDE FOR

"To provide" signifies to make ready for future use, to supply, and "additional" means "added; supplemental; coming by way of addition." Collier v. Smaltz, 128 N. W. 396, 399, 149 Iowa, 230, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1007.

"The primary meaning of the word 'provide' is 'to look out for in advance; to procure beforehand; to get, collect or make ready for future use; to prepare.'" (Webster's Dict.) Under Act December 17, 1896 (Acts 1896, p. 50; Van Epp's Code Supp. § 6219), providing that when it shall be impracticable to hold any session of any superior court at the courthouse it may be held at such place as the proper authorities of the county may provide, the county authorities might have procured and furnished a hall for a temporary courthouse and let it be known that they had 'provided' it as the place for holding this term of the superior court of the county without constituting and designating it as such by order or resolution duly passed and placed upon the minutes of their court; and, if they did so, such term of such court could have been lawfully held there. They could provide a place for the court to be held without constituting or designating it as such by advertisement or in any other public and informal manner. Cook v. State, 46 S. E. 64, 65, 119 Ga. 108.

Const. art. 4, § 20, provides that every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subjects shall be expressed in the title, and the act approved October 24, 1874, entitled "An act to provide for the construction of the Willamette Valley & Coast Railroad," granted to that railroad all the tide and marsh lands situated in the county of Benton, and the right to take from lands adjacent to its line material for the construction of the road, and that upon the filing of its acceptance thereof within 30 days the company should become invested with absolute title thereto, to be thereafter set apart. Held, that the word "provide" means to obtain or make ready supplies or means for future use, to take measures in view of an expected or possible need, and that within the meaning of that term the grant of land was germane to the title of the act. Corvallis & E. R. Co. v. Benson, 121 Pac. 418, 421, 61 Or. 359.

The title of the parole law of 1890, which is entitled "An act to revise the law in relation to sentence and the commitment of persons convicted of crime, and providing for a system of parole, and to provide compensation for the officers of said system of parole," does not contain two subjects by providing for the appropriation or supplying of compensation for the officers named in sections 9 and 11; the word "provide" as used in the title meaning to "fix" or "establish as a previous condition," to "grant or stipulate as a condition or provision," and not to appropriate money for such compensation, and hence does not contravene Const. art. 4, § 16, prohibiting the General Assembly from appropriating money out of the treasury in any private law, and prohibiting appropriation bills to pay the salaries of officers of the government from containing any provision on any other subject. People v. Joyce, 92 N. E. 607, 610, 246 Ill. 124, 20 Ann. Cas. 472.

Select distinguished

Act March 15, 1906, p. 432, c. 248 (Code 1904, § 1433), defining the powers and duties of the state board of education, was amended so as to declare that such board should "select" text-books, school furniture, and educational appliances for the public schools of the state, etc. Two days after, at the same session, Code 1904, § 1458, was amended by Acts 1906, pp. 513, 515, c. 293, and re-enacted, subsection 10 of which declared that the school board of a city should have power, and that it should be its duty, to "provide" schoolhouses with proper furniture and appliances, and to care for and manage and control the school property of the city. Held, that such acts were in pari materia, and should be construed together, and that under them a city school board had only power to provide such school furniture for the public schools of the city as had been selected by the state board of education; the words "select" and "provide" in such provisions not being synonymous, "provide" being used in the sense of "to furnish or supply," while "select" means "chosen" or "picked out." Commonwealth v. School Board of City of Norfolk, 63 S. E. 1081, 1082, 109 Va. 346.

PROVIDE A HOME OR RESIDENCE

Where a testator, by his will, gives personal and real estate in trust to "provide a home or residence" for his daughters, the survivor or survivors of them as long as they remain single and unmarried, the trustee is bound to provide one home or residence for all of the daughters, and not a home or residence for each one separately. Oliver v. Oliver, 3 N. J. Eq. 368, 370.

PROVIDED

See As Now Provided.

Otherwise provided, see Otherwise.

See, also, Proviso.

The word "provided," though sometimes used in statutes to except the clause covered by it from the general provisions of the statute, is nevertheless often used as a conjunction to an independent paragraph. Carter, Webster & Co. v. United States, 143 Fed. 256, 259, 74 C. C. A. 394.

The word "provided," in an ordinance declaring that none but official ballots provided in accordance with the ordinance shall be counted, means furnished, and the thing to be furnished is the official ballot printed at the direction of the city authorities in the prescribed form, and the mark of an election officer as required by the ordinance is not a part of the prescribed form, but is for identification of the ballot, and, though no ballot without such indorsement is allowed to be deposited in the ballot box, yet, where it is deposited, there is no prohibition against counting it. King v. State ex rel. Herbert, 70 S. W. 1019, 1021, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 320.

It is a common practice in legislative proceedings, on the consideration of bills, for parties desirous of securing amendments to them to precede their proposed amendments with the term "provided," so as to declare that, notwithstanding existing provisions, the one thus expressed is to prevail, thus having no greater signification than would be attached to the conjunction "but" or "and" in the same place, and simply serving to separate or distinguish the different paragraphs or sentences. St. Mass. 1887, c. 214, § 73, relating to the payment of premiums on life policies in fraud of creditors was amended by St. 1892, c. 372, by adding that any claim arising under a policy issued without previous medical examination or without the knowledge of the insured, or, if insured be a minor, without the consent of his parent or guardian, the statements made in the application shall be binding on the company, provided that it should not be barred from proving that such statements were false. Held, that the word "provided" in St. 1893, c. 434, § 1, amending such section by adding after the word "misleading," "and provided further that every policy which contains a reference to the application of the insured, * * * must have attached thereto a correct copy of the application" to be admissible in evidence, made the amendment of 1893 applicable to all life insurance policies, and not simply to the kinds specified in the amendment of 1892. Considine v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 43 N. E. 201, 202, 165 Mass. 462 (quoting and adopting definition in Georgia Railroad & Banking Co. v. Smith, 9 Sup. Ct. 47, 128 U. Act March 3, 1885, c. 319, 23 Stat. 340, relating to the Umatilla Indian reservation in Oregon, after providing for setting apart lands for allotments to the Indians, required the remainder of the lands to be surveyed, appraised, and sold at public auction, and "provided" that each purchaser should be entitled to purchase at such sale "160 acres of untimbered lands and an additional tract of 40 acres of timbered lands and no more," and that before patent issued for the untimbered lands he should be required to make proof that he had resided on the land purchased at least one year and had reduced at least 25 acres to cultivation. A portion of the lands not having been sold at the public sale, Act July 1, 1902, c. 1350, 32 Stat. 730, was passed authorizing their sale at private sale "in conformity with the provisions of" the prior act, "provided" that any bona fide settler on any of said lands should have the preference right to buy the same for 90 days. Held, that the latter act was supplementary to the first, and both must be construed together as a single act, and a purchaser of 160 acres of untimbered land under the first was disqualified by the limitation therein from buying under the second, although he was a settler on the tract he sought to buy; the clause following the word "provided" in said act not being a technical "proviso," nor intended to except settlers from any of the limitations imposed on all purchasers. Jones v. Hoover, 144 Fed. 217, 228 (citing Minis v. United States, 15 Pet. [40 U. S.] 423, 445, 10 L. Ed. 791).

As on condition

The word "provided" in its ordinary use signifies a condition. Shipley v. Jacob Tome Institute, 58 Atl. 200, 203, 99 Md. 520.

"Provided" means upon condition, or with the understanding. Nusly v. Curtis, 85 Pac. 846, 848, 36 Colo. 464, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592, 118 Am. St. Rep. 113, 10 Ann. Cas. 1134.

The word "provided" means on condition, and is appropriate for creating a condition precedent. Brewer v. Rust, 95 Pac. 233, 235, 20 Okl. 776 (citing De Vitt v. Kaufman Co., 66 S. W. 224, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 332; Robertson v. Caw [N. Y.] 3 Barb. 410).

The word "provided," as used in a statute, may mean "upon condition." Evans v.

Piedmont Nat. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 44 S. E. 2, 5, 117 Ga. 940 (citing Piedmont Nat. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Bryan, 41 S. E. 661, 115 Ga. 417).

The word "provided" is used in our legislation for many other purposes beside expressing a condition. United States v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 153 Fed. 918, 920 (citing Schlemmer v. Buffalo R. & P. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681).

Laws 1901, p. 961, c. 354, repealing the liability of directors for corporate debts because of a failure to file an annual report, but saving the right of a creditor against a director, providing an action be commenced within six months after the taking effect of the act, is not a statute of limitations, but rather declares a condition precedent to the right to bring an action, which may be waived, and this though the word "provided" is used. Watertown Nat. Bank of Watertown v. Bagley, 116 N. Y. Supp. 772, 775, 62 Misc. Rep. 380.

Where a devise is of all the rest, residue, and remainder of testatrix's property to a certain person and his heirs forever, provided he should take care of the testatrix and look after her while she lived, the word "provided" imports a conditional rather than an absolute estate, and the nature of the devise and the circumstances under which it was made manifest an intention on the part of the testatrix to make a conditional rather than an absolute gift; her object being to make provision for her own care and comfort during the remainder of her life. Brennan v. Brennan, 71 N. E. 80, 81, 185 Mass. 560, 102 Am. St. Rep. 363.

The word "provided" is used in legislation for many other purposes beside that of expressing a condition. As used in the proviso in the act relating to automatic couplers, Act March 2, 1893 (27 Stat. 531) § 6, that nothing in it shall apply to trains composed of four-wheeled cars, the only condition expressed in the clause is that four-wheeled cars shall be excepted from the requirements of the act. In substance it merely creates an exception, and the burden of proof is upon a carrier to bring itself within the exception. Schlemmer v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co., 27 Sup. Ct. 407, 408, 205 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 681.

A testator left to three persons named "the sum of $2,000 each, in cash or good security, to be paid at such time as does not inconvenience the business I have left nor my estate to pay the same. 'Provided' these three named parties, as above, shall continue to manage and have charge of the business I am now engaged in. They to decide whether it is best to continue said business, and if not so continued, how to close it out or sell it to the best advantage of my estate." The term "provided" is usually adopted to characterize a condition, but not necessarily, and "we are of the opinion that the expressed wishes of the testator show an intent to give the sum of $2,000 each to his trusted employes" without the contingency that the business was to be managed by the persons named. In re Davis' Estate, 104 N. W. 299, 300, 95 Minn. 340.

A testator in 1888 devised all his real property to his wife for life with remainder over to his two sons, each charged with the annual payment to a daughter, after the death of the wife, of interest on $1,000 during her natural life, and upon the daughter's death to pay the interest to a grandson until he reached the age of 24 and upon his arriving at the age of 24, "provided" he arrived at that age after the death of the daughter, or if the grandson was 24 years of age at the death of the daughter, then each of the sons should pay the sum of $1,000 to him or for his benefit. The daughter died in March, 1891, the grandson in June, 1891, at the age of 21 years, and the life tenant in 1892. Held that the word "provided" is a conditional term, and that the language used by testator disclosed his intention to make the vesting of the grandson's interest contingent upon his reaching the age of 24 years, and that as he died before reaching that age, the interest never vested in him. High v. Pollock, 80 Atl. 43, 45, 114 Md. 530.

Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 13, makes every estate in land devised a fee simple, though other words heretofore necessary to pass such estate be not added, if a less estate be not expressly limited, or do not appear to have been devised by operation of law. The will devised and bequeathed to testator's wife all the realty and personalty that he might die seized of, "provided she remains my widow, but should she marry, then all the property shall go to my children that are alive," except a life estate in one-third of the land. Held, that the widow took a conditional or base fee, subject to be terminated by her subsequent marriage, so that her grantee took such fee subject to divestiture by her marriage, and a child of testator had only an expectancy in the land until the happening of such event; the word "provided," as used in the will, not meaning the same as "while," which is merely an adverb expressing duration, but being an apt word to express a conditional estate, unless a different intention appears from the whole instrument. Cummings v. Lohr, 92 N. E. 970, 972, 246 Ill. 577.

As covenant or limitation

"Provided always" are typical words of condition, which may, either alone or with other words, be used to introduce reciprocal covenants in agreements. MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1030, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227 (quoting 2 Bl. Comm. *229).

"The word 'provided,' as used in statutes generally though not always, implies a limitation or restriction on what has preceded in the context. Provisos and exceptions are similar, intended to restrain the enacting clause, to except something which would otherwise be in it, or in some manner to modify it." But this is not always necessarily so. The word may, if such be the sense gathered from the whole act or instrument, simply explain what had previously been stated in general terms or direct the manner of doing what was allowed by the context to be done generally. Terrell v. City of Paducah, 92 S. W. 310, 312, 122 Ky. 331, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 289 (quoting and adopting definition in Suth. St. Const. § 222).

PROVIDED BY LAW

The words "provided by law," in Pub. Acts 1903, No. 136, providing that the term of imprisonment of any person convicted and sentenced shall not exceed the maximum term provided by law for the crime for which the person was convicted and sentenced, mean provided by statute law and do not mean the term fixed in the sentence. In re Campbell, 101 N. W. 826-828, 138 Mich. 597.

The fees of the attorney of record for the Eastern Cherokees were "provided for by law," within the meaning of a contract between him and his associate counsel, by which he was to pay his associates a specified sum for their services out of his stipulated fees, upon collection thereof, provided that, "in the contingency of the fees not being provided for by legislation * * * but upon proof of services," each party should look out for himself, where his fees were allowed in full by the court of claims, under the authority of the subsequent act (Act March 3, 1903, c. 994, 32 Stat. 996), since such statute, though not directly fixing the fees, dispensed with the necessity of making proof, under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2103, 2106, before the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, which must have been the "proof of services" contemplated by the parties. Owen v. Dudley, 30 Sup. Ct. 602, 603, 217 U. S. 488, 54 L. Ed. 851.

PROVIDED WELLS ARE COMPLETED DURING SAID TERM

A lease of land was for the term of three years and as much longer as oil and gas were found on the land, provided wells were completed during the term of the lease, which also stipulated that, if gas was found in sufficient quantities to market the same, the consideration should be $100 a year for each well as long as gas from such well was marketed, and that the lessee should sink a test well on the land within one year. Held, that the expression "provided wells are completed during said term" meant that other wells were to be completed during the term beside the test well, and that the mere sinking of a test well during the term, without marketing the gas found in it, did not entitle the lessee to an extension of the term beyond the three years, and an agreement by the lessee to furnish the lessor with gas from the test well in consideration of a release from the payment of any royalty while he was using the gas did not excuse it from its obligation to put down other wells. Hazel Green Oil & Gas Co. v. Collier, 110 S. W. 343, 844, 130 Ky. 132.

PROVISION

See Present Provision.

Other provisions, see Other.

Terms, conditions, or stipulations

The word "provision," as used in a policy insuring one subject to the "provisions, conditions, definitions and limits herein," indicates nothing technical, but is a general term which may include either a promise or undertaking of some kind or a condition. Blackman v. United States Casualty Co., 103 S. W. 784, 786, 117 Tenn. 578.

PROVISIONAL REMEDY

A "provisional remedy" is a collateral proceeding permitted only in connection with a regular action and as one of its incidents. Where plaintiff applied for an inspection of books and papers alleged to be necessary to enable him to frame a complaint, as authorized by Rev. St. 1898, § 4183, such proceeding was a provisional remedy, so that an order staying the proceedings on defendant's application to examine plaintiff as an adverse witness in defense thereof, as authorized by section 4096, was appealable under section 3069, authorizing an appeal from an order refusing a provisional remedy. Ellinger v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of the United States, 104 N. W. 811, 813, 125 Wis. 643 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5752).

Respondent having moved to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the transcript in time, appellants suggested a diminution of the record, and obtained an order requiring the clerk of the circuit court to certify up a nunc pro tunc order extending the time for filing. Respondent then applied, under L. O. L. § 832, to have the persons, on whose affidavits the order on the circuit clerk was obtained, appear before the clerk of the Supreme Court for examination, in aid of an application to vacate the extension of time. Held, that such order on the circuit court clerk was not a "provisional remedy," within L. O. L. § 832, to which cases the proceeding expressly is limited. Grover v. Hawthorne Estate, 114 Pac. 472, 62 Or. 77.

PROVISIONALLY EXECUTED

The words "provisionally executed," as employed in Code Prac. art. 580, to the effect that some judgments are "executed provisionally," although an appeal has been taken from the same within the delay prescribed, are to be taken as meaning that the judgments should be executed temporarily, previously to, and notwithstanding an appeal. State ex rel. Gelpi v. King, 37 South. 871, 873, 113 Ga. 905.

PROVISIONS

Corn, oats, and bran

The word "provisions," in Gen. St. 1901, § 5864, requiring a railroad contractor to give bond to pay all laborers, mechanics, and materialmen, and persons who supply such contractor with provisions or goods of any kind, includes corn, oats, and bran. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Graham, 74 Pac. 232, 233, 67 Kan. 791.

Eggs

Act May 4, 1889 (P. L. 87), entitled "An act relating to sale of provisions by description," is not defective in title, because the title does not specify the several articles of merchandise commonly understood as being comprehended within the term "provisions," to which the act relates. The act applies to a sale of eggs, inasmuch as eggs are "provisions" as that term is commonly understood when spoken of as the subject of sale. Weiss v. Swift & Co., 86 Pa. Super. Ct. 376, 381.

Food, fare, or provender

The word "provisions" in a will directing that testator's homestead, "with its appurtenances and furniture and necessary provisions, be held for the use of my wife and other members of my family" so long as they shall be living, is not used in the meaning of an act of providing, but in its plain meaning of food, fare, or provender. Searle v. Fieles, 83 N. E. 991, 992, 197 Mass. 343.

Tea and coffee

The term "provisions," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 65, § 15, permitting the sale of provisions without a license, does not include tea and coffee. The term has been held to mean food, victuals, fare, and provender, but tea and coffee are not used as food in the form in which they are sold by shopkeepers, but are used to make decoctions to be taken as a beverage for their agreeable taste or stimulating effect, and in this respect they are not very different from wine and beer as they are used in countries at meals. Commonwealth v. Caldwell, 76 N. E. 955, 190 Mass. 355, 112 Am. St. Rep. 334, 5 Ann. Cas. 879.

Where a clause of will provided that a certain sum should be paid to a legatee on his majority and in the meantime should be subject to the "provisions hereinafter contained," the clause necessarily meant all the provisions of the will capable of affecting the gift. Eckert v. Pennsylvania Trust Co., 61 Atl. 935, 936, 212 Pa. 372 (citing Bakes v. Reese, 24 Atl. 684, 150 Pa. 44, 45).

PROVISIONS OF LAW

The object of Laws 1907, c. 429, creating a Public Service Commission to regulate and control railroads as to the adequacy, security, and accommodation afforded by their service, and as to their compliance with all provisions of law, orders of the commission, and charter requirements, etc., is to regulate the management and the operations of carriers in the interest of the public, and for the persons using the facilities for the transportation of themselves or of their property, and to regulate carriers in their construction, equipment, terminal facilities, and operations, and the power of the commission should not be extended by implication beyond what may be necessary, and the commission should not reach out for dominion over matters not clearly within the statute; the words "provisions of law," referring only to the provisions of the act. People ex rel. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Willcox, 94 N. E. 212, 214, 200 N. Y. 423.

PROVISO

See, also, Provided.

"The general purpose of a 'proviso' is to except the clause covered by it from provisions of the statute, or to qualify a portion of the statute. But it is often used as a conjunction to an independent paragraph." State v. Harden, 58 S. E. 715-725, 62 W. Va. 313 (quoting and adopting Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Pack, 6 W. Va. 397, 403).

The province of a "proviso" is to restrain the enacting clause of a statute, and to except something which would otherwise have been within it, or to modify the enacting clause. Mackmull v. Brandlein, 137 N. Y. Supp. 607, 611, 152 App. Div. 733.

"Provisos" and "exception" in statutes are similar, being intended to restrain the enacting clause to except something which would otherwise be within it, something ingrafted upon a preceding enactment, intended to take special cases out of a general class, and the general intent and purpose of an enacting clause will be controlled by the particular intent subsequently expressed. State v. Barrett, 87 N. E. 7, 9, 172 Ind. 169.

In the construction of statutes, a "proviso" often constitutes an exception to the enacting words of the section. Provisos and exceptions are similar and are intended to restrain the enacting clause, to except something which would otherwise be within it or in some manner modified. "The office of a proviso is not to enlarge or extend the act of the section of which it is a part, but rather to put a limitation and a restraint upon the language which the lawmaker has employed." Laidlaw v. Portland V. & Y. R. Co., 84 Pac. 855, 857, 42 Wash. 292 (quoting In re Webb [N. Y.] 24 How. Prac. 247).

"Provisos" and "exceptions" are similar, being intended to restrain the enacting clause, to except something which would otherwise be in it, or in some manner to modify it; but this is not always necessarily so. The words may, if such be the sense gathered from the act or instrument, simply explain what had previously been stated in general terms, or direct the manner of doing what was allowed by the context to be done generally. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 3457, authorizing a common council of third class cities to cause streets to be graded, paved, etc., and providing for the payment of the cost out of the city treasury, providing the ordinances and contracts for such work shall specify how the work shall be paid for, the proviso or exception is directory and not mandatory, and hence it is not necessary, to render the city liable, that the ordinances shall specify how payment shall be made. Terrell v. City of Paducah, 92 S. W. 310, 312, 122 Ky. 331, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 289 (quoting Suth. St. Const. § 222).

"Matter set off from the parts of a section (of a statute) by the term 'provided' does not always constitute what in legal phraseology is termed and understood as a 'proviso.' This is well illustrated in Georgia Railroad & Banking Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S., where at page 181, 9 Sup. Ct. 49, 32 L. Ed. 377, Mr. Justice Field in referring to the term 'provided' says that it may have no greater significance than may be attached to the conjunction 'but' or 'and' and may serve only to 'support or distinguish the different paragraphs or sentences.' In the case of Wartensleben v. Haithcock, 1 South. 38, 40, 80 Ala. 568, Mr. Justice Clopton, speaking for the court, uses the following language: 'Generally the appropriate office of a proviso is to restrain or modify the enacting clause, or preceding matter, and should be confined to what precedes unless the intention that it shall apply to some other matter is apparent. When from the context, and a comparison of all the provisions relating to the same subject-matter, it is manifest that the object and intent were to give the proviso a scope extending beyond the section, and effect beyond the phrase immediately preceding, it will be construed as restraining or qualifying preceding sections relating to the subject-matter of the proviso, or as tantamount to an enactment in a separate section, without regard to its position and connection.' For rules of construction of provisos, see 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5755 et seq., under the title "Proviso." Marioneaux v. Cutler, 91 Pac. 355, 356, 32 Utah, 475.

Act March 3, 1885, c. 319, 23 Stat. 340, relating to the Umatilla Indian reservation in Oregon, after providing for setting apart lands for allotments to the Indians, required the remainder of the lands to be surveyed, appraised, and sold at public auction, and "provided" that each purchaser should be entitled to purchase at such sale "160 acres of untimbered lands and an additional tract of 40 acres of timbered lands and no more," and that before patent issued for the untimbered lands he should be required to make proof that he had resided on the land purchased at least one year and had reduced at least 25 acres to cultivation. A portion of the lands not having been sold at the public sale, Act July 1, 1902, c. 1380, 32 Stat. 730, was passed authorizing their sale at private sale "in conformity with the provisions of" the prior act, "provided" that any bona fide settler on any of said lands should have the preference right to buy the same for 90 days. Held, that the latter act was supplementary to the first, and both must be construed together as a single act, and a purchaser of 160 acres of untimbered land under the first was disqualified by the limitation therein from buying under the second, although he was a settler on the tract he sought to buy; the clause following the word "provided" in said act not being a technical "proviso," nor intended to except settlers from any of the limitations imposed on all purchasers. Jones v. Hoover, 144 Fed. 217, 228 (citing Minis v. United States, 15 Pet. [40 U. S.] 423, 445, 10 L. Ed. 791).

As applying to body of enactment

It is the office of a "proviso" to limit and restrain the preceding enactment, and it cannot be held to enlarge the scope of the preceding enactment. Stiers v. Mundy (Ind.) 89 N. E. 959, 960.

The office of a "proviso" is to restrict or explain the general terms of the act of which it forms a part, and not to add to the body of the substantive law nor to take anything therefrom. Brown v. Patterson, 124 S. W. 1, 6, 224 Mo. 639 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5755).

A "proviso" is something ingrafted upon a preceding enactment, and is legitimately used to take special cases out of the general enactments, and is generally intended to restrain the enacting clause and except something which would otherwise have been within it. Lichtensteiger v. State, 131 N. W. 623, 624, 89 Neb. 356.

"A 'proviso' in a grant or enactment is something taken back from the power just declared. The grant or enactment is to read, not as if the larger power was ever given, but as if no more was ever given than is contained within the terms or bonds of the proviso." Regan v. Iron County Court, 125 S. W. 1140, 1142, 226 Mo. 79 (citing Brown v. Patterson, 124 S. W. 1, 224 Mo. 639).

The word "proviso" attached to a statute is not a part of, but a restraint upon, an exception to, or a modification of some word or phrase of an act. In other words, a "proviso" to a general statute involving no uncertainty and doubt cannot be held, nor can words be selected therefrom in the body of the act. Tsutakawa v. Kumamoto, 101 Pac. 869-871, 53 Wash. 231 (citing Suth. St. Const. 222; Black, Interp Laws, 270; In re Webb [N. Y.] 24 How. Prac. 247).

Exception distinguished

An "exception" exempts something absolutely from the operation of a statute by express words in the enacting clause, while a "proviso" defeats its operation conditionally. Pabst Brewing Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 138 N. W. 1112, 1114, 148 Wis. 582.

"Exception" is defined in Anderson's Dict. as 'something withheld, not granted or parted with, the exclusion of the thing, or the thing or matter itself as excluded.' By the Century Dictionary as 'the act of excepting or leaving out of account; exclusion of the act or excluding from number designated or from a statement or description.' An exception is a proviso that excludes something from a statement or description." Cassidy v. Royal Exch. Assur. of London, 59 Atl. 549, 551, 99 Me. 399.

There is some distinction between a "proviso" and an "exception." A "proviso" is properly the statement of something extrinsic of the subject-matter of the covenant, which shall go in discharge of that covenant by way of defeasance; an "exception" is the taking out of a covenant some part of the subject-matter of it. A clause in a lease to furnish a lessee a certain water power, subject to the interruptions provided for in a certain lease by the Milwaukee & Rock River Canal Company to J. T. Perkins, but which were not set forth in the lease or in the declaration, was a "proviso," so that it was not necessary for the lessor to set out either the clause or the lease to which it referred. La Point v. Cady (Wis.) 2 Chand. 202, 210 (quoting and adopting 1 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 393, and cases in the Supreme Court).

As a limitation

The office of a "proviso" is not to enlarge or extend the act or section of the Constitution of which it is a part, but is a limitation on the language employed, and is to be construed strictly and limited to objects fairly within its terms. State v. Bryan, 39 South. 929, 957, 50 Fla. 293 (citing State ex rel. McQuaid v. Commissioners of Duval County, 3 South. 193, 23 Fla. 483, 486; Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. D'Alemberte, 21 South. 570, 39 Fla. 25; Futch v. Adams Bros., 36 South. 575, 47 Fla. 257; County Commissioners of Lake County v. State, 4 South. 795, 24 Fla. 263).

PROVOCATION

See Adequate Provocation; Reasonable Provocation; Sudden Provocation.

The "provocation," in order to be sufficient in law in cases of homicide, must be such as naturally or incidentally to produce in the minds of persons ordinarily constituted the highest degree of exasperation, rage, anger, sudden resentment, or terror. Johnson v. State, 108 N. W. 55, 60, 129 Wis. 143, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 9 Ann. Cas. 923.

No looks or gestures, however insulting, no words, however offensive or opprobrious, can amount to a "provocation" sufficient to excuse or justify even a slight assault. State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 972, 5 Pennewill, 24; State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1079, 5 Pennewill, 339; Ex parte Bollin, 109 Pac. 288, 289, 3 Okl. Cr. 725.

"Provocation," in order to mitigate a homicide, must be such as naturally and instantly to produce in the minds of persons ordinarily constituted the highest degree of exasperation, rage, anger, sudden resentment, or terror, rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection, and thus negating the inference of malice. The test of adequacy of the provocation "is not merely whether ungovernable passion was in fact aroused by the provocation, but also whether the provocation was sufficient so to affect ordinary and reasonable men, or men of fair average mind and disposition, that they would be liable to act with violence endangering life." Ryan v. State, 92 N. W. 271, 275, 115 Wis. 488.

It is not true that any indignity which tends to throw an average man into sudden heat and passion is "sufficient legal provocation" for a homicide. State v. Gilliam, 45 S. E. 6, 66 S. C. 419.

"At common law words of reproach, how grievous soever, were not 'provocation' sufficient to free the party killing from the guilt of murder, nor were contemptuous or insulting actions or gestures without an assault upon the person, nor was any trespassing against lands or goods, to have the effect to reduce the guilt of killing to a grade of manslaughter. The provocation must consist of a personal violence." 1 East, P. C. 233; 4 Bl. Comm. 201. Threats by decedent made a week or 10 days before the homicide were insufficient to form a basis for excitement and passion reducing the offense from murder to manslaughter. State v. Edwards, 102 S. W. 520, 525, 203 Mo. 528.

An instruction that the jury should determine the adequacy of the provocation, instead of the adequacy of the cause of accused's passion, claimed to reduce a homicide to manslaughter, was not error; "provocation" meaning the cause of resentment or the act of provoking or causing anger, and the provocation for the passion being necessarily its cause. Williams v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 763, 770.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction defining "provocation" as any such provocation by improper conduct of deceased toward defendant as to cause defendant to be so far under the dominion of sudden passion in consequence thereof as to be unable to judge rightly as to the nature and quality and consequence of his acts, or to materially impede or interfere with such judgment, and take away deliberation and prevent a cool state of the blood, was a sufficient definition of such term. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 260, 198 Mo. 23.

PROVOKE

PROVOKING A DIFFICULTY

Commencing a difficulty is not "provoking a difficulty," within the statute relating to provoking difficulty. Reese v. State, 91 S. W. 583, 584, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 242.

Where it is said that before a homicide can be treated as justifiable it must appear that the slayer did not "provoke the difficulty," this must be understood as meaning, not that he must not have done anything which might in the ordinary sense of the word be regarded as provocation, but that the provocation must not have been such as would in law be sufficient to justify the attack against which he was defending himself when the homicide was committed. Smarrs v. State, 61 S. E. 914, 917, 131 Ga. 21 (quoting Butler v. State, 19 S. E. 51, 92 Ga. 601, 606; citing Boatwright v. State, 15 S. E. 21, 89 Ga. 140; Fussell v. State, 19 S. E. 891, 94 Ga. 78).

PROVOKING A FIGHT

"Beginning a fight is not 'provoking a fight' within the contemplation of the law," and to abridge an accused's right of self-defense because of provoking the difficulty he must do some overt act or make some statement indicating a purpose to arouse anger and provoke resentment on the part of the injured party, which act or conduct did provoke it, and it is error to instruct that if accused committed the assault as a means of defense, believing that he was in danger of losing his life or of serious bodily injury, then accused should be acquitted, unless he sought decedent for the purpose of provoking a difficulty with the intent to take life or do serious bodily injury, where there was no evidence that accused actually did provoke the difficulty other than that he began the fight. Smith v. State, 87 S. W. 151, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 208.

PROXIMATE

See, also, Approximate—Approximately; Remote—Remoteness.

"Proximate" is defined as lying or being in immediate relation with something else, and as synonymous with direct or immediate. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie, 135 Fed. 465, 473, 68 C. C. A. 177 (citing And. Law Dict. 155).

In an action for wrongful death, the court's use of the words "immediate and proximate cause" in an instruction submitting plaintiff's theory of the case was not objectionable, since the words "immediate and proximate" were synonyms and the antonym of "remote"; the word "proximate," when connected with the word "immediate," being readily understood by the jury. Herke v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 125 S. W. 822, 823, 141 Mo. App. 613.

In instructions as to the causal connection between defendant's negligence and plaintiff's injury, the use of the word "direct," instead of the word "proximate," is not error; the word "proximate" being synonymous with "direct" and "immediate." Sivertson v. City of Moorhead, 138 N. W. 674, 675, 119 Minn. 467.

A requested charge in an action for injury to a passenger respecting the "proximate or principal cause" was bad for using the word "principal," which is not a synonym of "proximate." Woolsey v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 16, 18, 123 App. Div. 631.

Damages recoverable from a wrongdoer must be the natural and proximate effects of its delinquency; the term "natural" importing such as might reasonably have been foreseen, and "proximate" indicating that there must be no other culpable and efficient agency intervening between the wrongdoer's acts and the loss. Smith v. Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, 75 Atl. 937, 938, 78 N. J. Law, 478, 20 Ann. Cas. 151.

"For the purpose of civil liability, those consequences, and those only, are deemed 'immediate,' 'proximate,' or 'natural and probable,' which a person of average competence and knowledge, being in the like case with the person whose conduct is complained of, and having the like opportunities of observation, might be expected to foresee as likely to follow upon such conduct." "This principle is commonly expressed in the maxim that 'a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts,' or, in the terms of a judicial statement, 'a party must be considered, in point of law, to intend that which is the necessary and natural consequences of that which he does.'" Rodgers v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 88 Pac. 885, 75 Kan. 222, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 12 Ann. Cas. 441 (quoting with approval from Pol. Torts).

In many opinions, the term "proximate" is used in the sense of an originating cause, from which the injurious effect is logically traced through an intervening series of acts or events. This rule is, of course, properly applicable where the right of recovery is based upon the second clause of the civil damage statute, which makes the liquor dealer liable for injury sustained "in consequence" of the intoxication of any person. But where recovery is sought under the first clause for injury done "by an intoxicated person," the adjudicated cases are practically unanimous that when plaintiff has proved the unlawful sale to a person on whom she is dependent for support, and the intoxication of such person thereby produced an injury done by him while in that condition to her means of support, she has made the case for which the statute provides. Bistline v. Ney Bros., 111 N. W. 422, 426, 134 Iowa, 172, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158, 13 Ann. Cas. 196.

PROXIMATE CAUSE

See As the Direct and Proximate Cause.
See, also, Intervening Cause; Originating Cause; Remote Cause.

In law "proximate cause" refers to the person producing it, as against "proximate cause" in logic, which refers to the moving influence itself. Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 111 Pac. 534, 536, 158 Cal. 499, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134.

"Proximate cause" must be the responsible, active, operative, and continuing cause as well as the probable and natural source of the injury. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Cozatt, 79 N. E. 534, 538, 39 Ind. App. 682 (citing Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Charman, 67 N. E. 923, 161 Ind. 95-103).

The proximate relation of cause and effect, establishing legal responsibility, implies that the result produced had its inception in some responsible agency. Cary v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of New York, 106 N. W. 1055, 1056, 127 Wis. 67, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 926, 115 Am. St. Rep. 997, 7 Ann. Cas. 484.

The term "proximate cause" excludes the idea of legal liability based on merely speculative suggestions as to what might have happened had some circumstance remotely connected with the events leading up to the injury have been otherwise than it was in fact. Anderson v. Wapello Coal Co., 131 N. W. 684, 151 Iowa, 479.

"Proximate cause" is legally a part of the cause, one without which there might have been no injury. Where, in spite of plaintiff's negligence in selecting an incompetent driver, defendant street car company by the exercise of care could have prevented injury to plaintiff in the position he occupied in the care of such driver, defendant's failure to do so constituted the sole cause of the injury, for which plaintiff was entitled to recover, notwithstanding his prior negligence in selecting such driver or the driver's negligence at the time of the accident. Hanson v. Manchester St. Ry., 62 Atl. 595, 597, 73 N. H. 395.

The phrase "proximate cause" is one of a large and learned terminology, and it involves a refinement in mental processes and reasoning not the essence of a good instruction, provided the element of causal connection between the negligence and the injury is presented to the jury in another way and within easy comprehension. An instruction that if defendant's motorman saw, or by keeping a vigilant watch would have seen, the decedent crossing the street, and in a position of danger, and by stopping the car within the shortest time and space practicable, etc., with the means and appliances at hand, by the exercise of ordinary care consistent with the safety of the car and persons thereon, could have avoided running over and killing decedent, and neglected to do so, plaintiffs are entitled to recover, etc., in the absence of contributory negligence, is sufficient to submit to the jury the question of causal connection between the negligence of defendant and the death of the child, though it did not use the expression "proximate cause." Cornovski v. St. Louis Transit Co., 106 S. W. 51, 55, 207 Mo. 263.

The definition of "proximate cause" as given in Webst. Dict.: "A cause which immediately precedes and causes the effect, as distinguished from the remote, mediate, or predisposing cause"—is perhaps too general for legal application. The term as applied to a personal injury for which recovery is sought is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as: "The cause nearest in causation, without any efficient concurring cause to produce the result, may be considered the direct cause." The term is often defined as "that which stands next in causal relation." As stated in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256, "the primary cause may be the 'proximate cause' of a disaster, though it may operate through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may be moved by a force applied to the other end; that force being the 'proximate cause' of the movement." Or as stated in Morrisette v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 52 Atl. 520, 522, 74 Vt. 232, 242, 243, in discussing "proximate cause": "Its proximity has no necessary connection with continuity of space nor nearness of time, but only with that of which the result is the natural and probable consequence, in the sense that a prudent man ought to have foreseen it. Hence, in this class of cases, the defendant's negligence is the proximate cause of the natural and probable consequences of it, and whether the result complained of in the concrete case is the natural and probable consequence of it is a question for the jury, unless it is plain enough to be ruled as matter of law." Or as stated in Corbin v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 63 Atl. 138, 139, 78 Vt. 458, 461, 462: "The test of actionable negligence is whether the injury which followed the act or omission in question was a natural and probable consequence in the sense that a prudent man ought to have foreseen it." Place v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 67 Atl. 545, 548, 549, 80 Vt. 196.

And. Law Dict. defines "proximate cause" as "the nearest, the immediate, the direct cause; the efficient cause; the cause that sets another or other causes in operation." A more comprehensive definition is given in East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Kelly, 20 S. W. 312, 91 Tenn. loc. cit. 704, 17 L. R. A. 691, 30 Am. St. Rep. 902, where, quoting from Deming & Co. v. Merchants' Cotton-Press & Storage Co., 17 S. W. 89, 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L. R. A. 518, it is said: "The 'proximate cause' of an injury may, in general, be stated to be that act or omission which immediately causes or fails to prevent the injury, an act or omission occurring or concurring with another, which, had it not happened, the injury would not have been inflicted, notwithstanding the latter." In Dickson v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co., 27 S. W. 476, 124 Mo. loc. cit. 149, 25 L. R. A. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429; Hudson v. Wabash Western Ry. Co., 14 S. W. 15, 101 Mo. 13; Glick v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 57 Mo. App. 97; Saxton v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 72 S. W. 717, 98 Mo. App. 494; Ohl v. Bethlehem Township, 49 Atl. 288, 199 Pa. 588; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. loc. cit. 130, 24 L. Ed. 395; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Sipes, 55 Pac. 1093, 26 Colo. 17; Liming v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 81 Iowa, 246, 47 N. W. 66; Butcher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co., 16 S. E. 457, 37 W. Va. 180, 18 L. R. A. 519; and Western Railway of Alabama v. Mutch, 11 South. 894, 97 Ala. 194, 21 L. R. A. 316, 38 Am. St. Rep. 179—it was ruled: "The 'proximate cause' of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred." In other cases "proximate cause" has been defined to be "that cause which immediately precedes and directly produces an effect as distinguished from a remote or predisposing cause," as in Troy v. Cape Fear & Y. V. R. Co., 6 S. E. 77, 99 N. C. loc. cit. 306, 6 Am. St. Rep. 521; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 27 Conn. loc. cit. 406, 71 Am. Dec. 78. In Lindvall v. Woods, 44 Fed. loc. cit. 857, it is said: "The 'proximate cause' of an injury is that cause which immediately precedes and directly produces the injury, without which the injury would not have occurred." In Yoders v. Amwell Tp., 33 Atl. 1017, 172 Pa. loc. cit. 454, 51 Am. St. Rep. 750, quoting from Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653, it is said: "The injury must be of the natural and probable consequences of the negligence; such a consequence as, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, might and ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer." In Banks v. Wabash Western Ry. Co., 40 Mo. App. 458, in determining what is the "proximate cause" of an injury, the true rule is declared to be as follows: "The injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence, such a consequence as, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, might and ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer as likely to flow from his act." This case is approvingly cited in Bradford

v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 64 Mo. App. 475. In Rigby v. Hewitt, 5 Exch. 243, it is said: "Every person who does a wrong is at least responsible for all the mischievous consequences that may reasonably be expected to result under ordinary circumstances from such misconduct." In Graney v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 57 S. W. 276, 157 Mo. loc. cit. 683, 50 L. R. A. 153, Judge Sherwood said: "No man is required to anticipate an accident that has never occurred before, or held negligent if he fails to do so." See, also, Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Woolley, 28 South. 26, 77 Miss. 927; Hansen v. St. Paul Gaslight Co., 84 N. W. 727, 82 Minn. 84; American Exp. Co. v. Risley, 53 N. E. 558, 179 Ill. 295; Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (Cal.) 9 Pac. loc. cit. 155. In Shear. & R. Neg. (4th Ed.) § 26, "the 'proximate cause' of an event," it is said, "must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred." Whart. Neg. § 97, says: "The injury must proceed in ordinary natural sequence from the neglect." Foley v. McMahon, 90 S. W. 113, 114, 114 Mo. App. 442.

The "proximate cause" of an event juridically considered may be abstractly defined as that which in a natural sequence, unbroken by a new and intervening cause, produces that event and without which that event could not have occurred. It must be an efficient act of causation, separated from its effect by no other act of causation. Nehring v. Connecticut Co., 84 Atl. 301, 305, 86 Conn. 109, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 902.

The law is well settled that an act or omission in order to constitute negligence for which an action will lie must directly, as its natural consequence, produce injury to another. Cooley, in his work on Torts (2d Ed., pp. 73-76), says: "It is not only requisite that damage actual or inferential should be suffered, but this damage must be the legitimate sequence of the thing amiss. The maxim of the law here applicable is that in law the immediate, and not the remote, cause of any event is regarded, and in the application of it the law rejects, as not constituting the foundation for an action, that damage which does not flow proximately from the act complained of. In other words, the law always refers the injury to the proximate, but not the remote, cause. The explanation of this maxim may be given thus: If an injury has resulted in consequence of a certain wrongful act or omission, but only through or by means of some intervening cause, from which last cause the injury followed as a direct and immediate consequence, the law will refer the damage to the last 'proximate cause,' and refuse to trace it to that which was more remote." "The 'proximate cause' is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation." The causes that are merely incidental or instruments of a superior or controlling agency are not the proximate causes and the responsible ones. Edgar v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co., 90 Pac. 745, 748, 32 Utah, 330, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738, 125 Am. St. Rep. 867 (citing Ætna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 130, 24 L. Ed. 395).

The "proximate cause" of an event has been defined as that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces the event, and without which it could not have occurred. The phrase is the name of a legal doctrine used to fix liability for damages and in meaning is akin to, if not identical with, what is called in logic the "efficient cause." As used in judicial decisions, the term signifies a breach of duty owed to a person, followed by injury to him, either as the direct result of the dereliction or through its consecutive consequences, and subject to the condition that there must have been such a probability of the breach proving detrimental, instead of innocent, that, in reason, blame for the injury may fairly be imputed to the wrongdoer. Where an employer furnished a servant a machine known to be unsafe by reason of a loose bar, and when the defect hindered the operation of the machine the servant was injured in an attempt to continue the work, the defect was the "proximate cause" of the injury. Lawrence v. Heidebreder Ice Co., 93 S. W. 897, 899, 119 Mo. App. 316.

The term "proximate cause" "signifies a breach of duty owed to a person, followed by injury to him, either as the direct result of the dereliction or through its consecutive consequences, and subject to the condition that there must have been sufficient probability of the breach proving detrimental instead of innocent, that, in reason, blame for the injury may fairly be imputed to the wrongdoer." Lyman v. Dale, 136 S. W. 760, 761, 156 Mo. App. 427 (quoting and approving definition in Lawrence v. Heidebreder Ice Co., 93 S. W. 897, 899, 119 Mo. App. 316, 328; Hodges v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 135 Mo. App. 683, loc. cit. 691, 692, 116 S. W. 1131; Bokamp v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 100 S. W. 689, 123 Mo. App. 270; Haley v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 731, 179 Mo. 30, 64 L. R. A. 295; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256).

A "proximate cause," in the law of negligence, is such a cause as operates to produce particular consequences without the intervention of any independent, unforeseen cause, without which the injuries would not have occurred; it is the cause which sets in motion a train of events which, in their natural sequence, ought and might be expected to produce an injury if undisturbed by any independent or intervening cause. Glenn v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 150 S. W. 1092, 1095, 167 Mo. App. 109.

As used in judicial decisions, the term "proximate cause" signifies a breach of duty owed to a person, followed by injury to him, either as a direct result of the dereliction or through its consecutive consequences, and subject to the condition that there must have been sufficient probability of the breach proving detrimental, instead of innocent, that, in reason, blame for the injury may fairly be imputed to the wrongdoer. Evidence was held insufficient to show that defendant's failure to furnish oil for plaintiff's torch was the "proximate cause" of his injury while putting coal into a locomotive by stepping on a piece of coal, which caused him to fall. Hodges v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 116 S. W. 1131, 1134, 135 Mo. App. 683 (quoting and adopting definition in Lawrence v. Heidebreder Ice Co., 93 S. W. 899, 119 Mo. App. loc. cit. 328).

To hold a railroad company liable for injuries to a person struck by a train, the evidence must show that the company's negligence was the "proximate cause" of the injury, and, to constitute proximate cause, there must be causal connection between the injury and the negligence. Billingsly v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 56 South. 790, 791, 100 Miss. 612.

In an action for injuries to a servant, an instruction that "proximate" cause meant the immediate, direct, actual, natural, efficient, and real cause was no ground for reversal of a judgment in favor of plaintiff, as it placed a heavier burden on him than the correct rule. Odegard v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co., 110 N. W. 809, 818, 136 Wis. 659.

The court charged, in an action for personal injuries, that the "proximate cause" of an injury was a cause without which it would not have happened, and which, in a natural and continuous sequence, produces an injury; and, in order to find that negligence is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that it was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence, and should have been foreseen as a result likely to occur in the light of the attending circumstances. Held, that the charge sufficiently defined proximate cause. Freeman v. Swan (Tex.) 143 S. W. 724, 730.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé, the court defined "proximate cause" and used in its instructions the word "proximate" several times, the use of the word "approximately" for "proximately" in a charge relating to proximate cause was not erroneous. Choctaw, O. & T. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 96 S. W. 1091, 1093, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

Delay of a carrier in transporting goods, whereby they come in the path of a flood and are destroyed by the act of God, is not a "proximate cause" of their injury. When an extraordinary natural disturbance gives warning of the time and path of its approach and of its general magnitude and power, common carriers whose business places them in charge of the safety of persons and property are charged with the duty of exercising care commensurate with the exigencies of the situation. A breach of such duty is negligence, and, if injury results, must be regarded as a proximate and not a remote cause of the injury. Elam v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 93 S. W. 851, 852, 117 Mo. App. 453.

Concurring or contributing cause

By "proximate cause" is not meant the last cause, nor the sole cause, of an injury, but the proximate cause may be any act that aided in producing the result. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Trigo, 108 S. W. 1193, 1194, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is not always the last act of cause or the nearest act to the injury, but it may be such a negligent act as actively aids in producing the injury as a direct and existing concurrent cause, and such as might reasonably be expected to result in the injury. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bellar, 112 S. W. 323, 326, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

Two agencies, acting independently of each other, may jointly and concurrently be the "proximate cause" of an injury when it would not have happened except for a concurrence at approximately the same time and place of the two negligent acts. City of Louisville v. Hart's Adm'r, 136 S. W. 212, 215, 143 Ky. 171, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207 (citing Shear. & R. Neg. § 26).

To constitute a negligent act the "proximate cause" of an injury, it is not necessary that it be the sole cause, but it is sufficient if it is a concurring cause from which the result might reasonably have been contemplated as involving the result which actually happened under the circumstances, it not being necessary that the injury in the precise form in which it in fact resulted should have been foreseen; it being sufficient that it appears after the accident to have been a natural and probable consequence. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Green (Tex.) 141 S. W. 341, 346 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5760).

By "proximate cause" is meant such an act wanting in ordinary care as actively aided in producing the injury as a direct and existing cause, and it need not necessarily be the last or sole cause, but it must be a concurring cause, such as might have been contemplated as involving the result under the attending circumstances. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Oram (Tex.) 92 S. W. 1029, 1031.

Where an injury results from the negligence of defendant and some other contributing cause, but not an independent efficient cause, and the injury could not have occurred in the absence of either cause, defendant's negligence is a proximate cause of the injury, if, under the circumstances of defendant's negligence the injury was a probable, natural, and usual result of the two contributing causes. Benedict Pineapple Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 46 South. 732, 737, 55 Fla. 514, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 92.

"Where the concurrent cause is the independent wrongful act of a responsible person, such act arrests action, being regarded as the 'proximate cause' of the injury; the original negligence being considered as its remote cause. As in the law it is the proximate and not the remote cause which is regarded, he who is guilty of the original negligence is not chargeable, but redress must be sought from him who directly caused the injury." The negligence of a carrier, consisting of its failure to call a station, to stop a reasonable length of time to permit passengers to disembark and embark, in failing to light its platform, in permitting a dangerous obstruction to remain on the platform at a point where passengers ought to have been able to embark and disembark with reasonable safety, was the "proximate cause" of injury to a passenger while disembarking. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Calhoun, 89 Pac. 207, 210, 18 Okl. 75, 11 Ann. Cas. 681.

It is not essential that a cause should act alone in order to constitute it the "proximate cause"; but if it concurs with another cause in producing the result it will be a proximate cause, and one or both of the instruments setting the cause in motion will be liable for the damages arising therefrom. Where an accident occurred from two causes, both due to negligence of different defendants, but together an efficient cause, such concurring cause was a proximate cause, and the negligence of one furnished no excuse for the negligence of the other. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Vollrath, 89 S. W. 279, 281, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 46 (citing Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Croskell, 25 S. W. 496, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 160; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. McWhirter, 14 S. W. 26, 77 Tex. 356, 19 Am. St. Rep. 755).

The juridical or "proximate cause" of an injury is not necessarily the sole cause. The fact that the conduct of the person injured or of a third person concurred with the negligence of defendant does not necessarily render the injury a remote consequence of such conduct. Although an intervening act of plaintiff himself has concurred in producing the damages for which a recovery is sought, defendant is not thereby excused if the injury is the natural result of, or was naturally and reasonably induced by, the antecedent act of defendant. The rule is the same where, though plaintiff's act may not in strictness have been caused or induced by the defendant's act or omission, yet the latter caused or created a negligent and dangerous condition upon which the plaintiff's act, harmless and innocent in itself, and of a nature which might have been anticipated, operated to produce the injuries received. Rollestone v. T. Cassirer & Co., 59 S. E. 442, 447, 3 Ga. App. 161.

An injury suffered by the negligent act of another is the "proximate cause" of the effect produced, though the person injured may have been suffering at the time from disease which aggravated the consequences of such injury. City of Roswell v. Davenport, 89 Pac. 256, 257, 14 N. M. 91 (citing Crane Elevator Co. v. Lippert, 63 Fed. 942, 11 C. C. A. 521; Delaplain v. Kansas City, 109 Mo. App. 107, 83 S. W. 71; Owens v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 8 S. W. 350, 650, 95 Mo. 182, 6 Am. St. Rep. 39; Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42 Iowa, 274; Sawyer v. Dulany, 30 Tex. 479; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 11 N. W. 356, 911, 54 Wis. 342, 41 Am. Rep. 41; Chicago City R. Co. v. Saxby, 72 N. E. 755, 213 Ill. 274, 68 L. R. A. 164, 104 Am. St. Rep. 218; Baltimore City Pass. Ry. Co. v. Kemp, 61 Md. 74; Suth. Dam. (3d Ed.) § 36; 13 Cyc. p. 81).

The use of the phrase "proximately contributed to" in lieu of that of "proximately caused" is not erroneous, in an action against a company operating a mine to recover for the death of a miner, when used in reference to the effect of defendant's failure to comply with a statute, for the protection of miners, where, if death was caused as contended, defendant's failure to comply with the statute "proximately contributed to" the accident. Athens Min. Co. v. Carnduff, 123 Ill. App. 178.

In an action for death under an accident policy wherein the court charged generally that plaintiff must show that death resulted from the accident alone, and also charged that the burden was on defendant to show the specific cause of death to have been other than the accident, it was held that the use of the word "proximate" cause of death in the sense of "sole" cause, when taken in connection with other qualifying and restrictive words in the same connection, did not render the instruction confusing or erroneous to an extent requiring a reversal of the judgment. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Leibus, 28 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 700, 707.

Continuous, natural sequence

"Proximate cause" is that cause which in natural and continued sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produced the result complained of, and without which that result would not have occurred. Town of Lyons v. Watt, 95 Pac. 949, 950, 43 Colo. 238; Snyder v. Colorado Springs & C. D. R. Co., 85 Pac. 636, 36 Colo. 288, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 781, 118 Am. St. Rep. 110 (quoting and adopting definition in Denver & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Sipes, 55 Pac. 1093, 26 Colo.

17); Evansville & I. R. Co. v. Allen, 73 N. E. 630, 631, 34 Ind. App. 636.

The "proximate cause" of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred. Alice, Wade City & C. C. Telephone Co. v. Billingsley, 77 S. W. 255, 257, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 452 (quoting Shear. & R. Neg. § 26); Williams v. San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 122, 126, 6 Cal. App. 715 (quoting and adopting definition of 1 Shear. & R. Neg. [5th Ed.] p. 27); Pilmer v. Boise Traction Co., 94 Pac. 432, 436, 14 Idaho, 327, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 125 Am. St. Rep. 161; El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith, 108 S. W. 988, 992, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 10; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Blake, 95 S. W. 593, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 180; Jansen v. Southern Pac. Co., 89 Pac. 616, 617, 5 Cal. App. 12 (quoting Shear. & R. Neg. § 26); Washington Mills v. Cox, 157 Fed. 634, 639, 85 C. C. A. 154 (quoting and adopting definition in Moore, Carriers, c. 12, § 2, p. 377); McVay v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 266, 267, 113 App. Div. 724.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces the injury, and without which the injury would not have occurred. Therriault v. England, 116 Pac. 581, 582, 43 Mont. 376; Strojniy v. Griffin Wheel Co., 116 Ill. App. 550, 552.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is the natural and continuing sequence unbroken by an intervening cause producing the injury, and without which it would not have happened. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Justice, 101 Pac. 469, 473, 80 Kan. 10; Hull v. Thomson Transfer Co., 115 S. W. 1054, 1055, 135 Mo. App. 119; Mize v. Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co., 100 Pac. 971, 973, 38 Mont. 521, 129 Am. St. Rep. 659, 16 Ann. Cas. 1189.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is that cause which in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces the injury, and without which the result would not have accrued. Kremer v. New York Edison Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 883, 888, 102 App. Div. 433; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Justice, 101 Pac. 469, 473, 80 Kan. 10 (quoting Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 63 Fed. 400, 11 C. C. A. 253, 27 L. R. A. 583).

"Proximate cause" of an injury is the natural and continuing sequence, unbroken by any intervening cause, preceding the injury, and without which it could not have happened. Joslin v. Linder, 128 N. W. 500, 502, 26 S. D. 420.

The "proximate cause" of the event must be shown to be that which in natural, continuous sequence, unbroken by any new acts produces the event, without which that event would not have occurred. Ship v. Fridenberg, 117 N. Y. Supp. 599, 601, 132 App. Div. 782 (quoting and adopting definition in Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L. R. A. 216).

It is sufficient to make a negligent act the "proximate cause" of an injury that the consequences follow in unbroken sequence from the wrong to the injury without an intervening efficient cause. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Siler, 82 N. E. 362, 364, 229 Ill. 390, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 819, 11 Ann. Cas. 368.

By "proximate cause" is meant a cause which naturally, by continuous sequence, unbroken by a new cause, produces a result; it need not necessarily be the nearest or immediate cause which may be merely an instrument of the dominant or efficient cause. Richmond Coal Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., Limited, of London, England, 159 Fed. 985, 987.

The legal doctrine of "proximate cause" is based on the principle that consequences which follow from an original wrong is unbroken sequence, without an intervening sufficient independent cause, are natural and proximate, and for these the original wrongdoer is responsible. Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 111 Pac. 534, 536, 158 Cal. 499, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134.

Negligence is a "proximate cause" of an injury or loss when, in ordinary, natural sequence, it causes or contributes to causing the injury or loss, without an intervening independent efficient cause. Woodbury v. Tampa Waterworks Co., 49 South. 556, 559, 57 Fla. 243, 249, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034.

By "proximate cause" is meant a cause which, operating in natural and ordinary sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces the event, and without which such event would not have happened. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Haney (Tex.) 94 S. W. 386, 388.

"The 'proximate cause' of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event and without which that event would not have happened. Proximity in point of time or space, however, is no part of the definition. That is of no importance, except as it may afford evidence for or against proximity of causation." Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 96 S. W. 670, 671, 120 Mo. App. 168 (quoting and adopting definition in Dickson v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co., 27 S. W. 476, 124 Mo. 140, 25 L. R. A. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429).

The "proximate cause" is the one that acts first, whether immediate to the injury, or such injury be reached by setting other causes in motion each in order being started naturally by the one that precedes it, and altogether constituting a complete chain or succession of events, so united to each other by a close causal connection as to form a natural whole, reaching from the first or producing cause to the final result. Gary v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of New York, 106 N. W. 1055, 1056, 127 Wis. 67, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 926, 115 Am. St. Rep. 997, 7 Ann. Cas. 484 (quoting and adopting definition in Delsenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co., 72 N. W. 735, 97 Wis. 288).

The "proximate cause" of an event is that which in a natural sequence, unbroken by any new and intervening cause, produces that event, and without which it would not have occurred, and the last conscious agent in producing an injury is the one liable for it, and the law does not search for more remote agencies. Miner, Read & Garrette v. McNamara, 72 Atl. 138, 140, 81 Conn. 690, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

That cause is "proximate" without which the accident would not have happened, but which, in the probable sequence of events, and without the interposition of a new and efficient cause wholly sufficient in itself, produces the wrong complained of. Shugart v. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry., 133 Fed. 505, 510, 66 C. C. A. 379 (citing Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 479, 24 L. Ed. 256; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Callaghan, 56 Fed. 988, 6 C. C. A. 205; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Price, 97 Fed. 424, 38 C. C. A. 239).

"Proximate cause" is well defined as that cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient, intervening cause, produced the result complained of, and without which that result would not have occurred. In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, to Use of Trainor, 33 Md. 543, the Supreme Court, in defining "proximate cause," said: "By proximate cause is intended an act which directly produced, or concurred directly in producing, the injury." Claypool v. Wigmore, 71 N. E. 509, 510, 34 Ind. App. 35.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is one which produces the result in continuous sequence, and without which it would not occur, and one from which any man of ordinary prudence could foresee that such result was probable under all the facts as they existed. Ramsbottom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 50 S. E. 448, 449, 138 N. C. 38.

Negligence to furnish the foundation of an action for damages must be the proximate cause of the injury complained of; proximate cause being that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new and independent cause, produces the event, and without which it would not have occurred. City of Indianapolis v. Slider, 95 N. E. 334, 335, 48 Ind. App. 38.

Under the rule of "proximate cause," the damages must be proximate to the wrongful act; that is, they must follow the negligent act in unbroken sequence, without any intervening independent cause to break the continuity. Crouse v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 N. W. 752, 755, 104 Wis. 478 (citing Mueller v. Milwaukee St. Ry. Co., 56 N. W. 914, 86 Wis. 340, 21 L. R. A. 721).

When the act and the injury are not known by common experience to be naturally and usually in sequence, and the injury does not, according to the ordinary course of events, follow from the act, then the act and the injury are not sufficiently connected to make the act the "proximate cause" of the injury. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Prunty, 133 Fed. 18, 20, 66 C. C. A. 163 (citing Cooley, Torts [2d Ed.] 73; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 32).

The "proximate cause" of an injury is that act which directly produced, or concurred directly in producing, the injury in a natural and continuous sequence unbroken by any new cause. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Wills, 68 S. E. 395, 397, 111 Va. 32, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 280.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is the primary moving cause without which it would not have been inflicted, and which in the natural sequence of events, without the intervention of any independent cause, causes the injury. City of Winona v. Botzet, 169 Fed. 321, 328, 94 C. C. A. 563, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 204.

"Proximate cause" means closeness or nearness in point of causal relation. In general terms, it may be said to be the rule of the cases that the causa proxima is sufficiently established if the facts are so far connected in orderly sequence as that it can be fairly said that, in the absence of the cause alleged, the injury and damage complained of would not have occurred. Watters v. City of Waterloo, 101 N. W. 871, 873, 126 Iowa, 199.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is a cause which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces an event, and without which the event would not have occurred, and, to warrant a finding that negligence is a proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence, and ought to have been foreseen as likely to occur by a person of ordinary prudence. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Schubert (Tex.) 130 S. W. 708, 709.

"Proximate cause" means such cause as, acting in a natural and ordinary sequence unbroken by any new cause, produces the result. In an action for personal injuries where there was evidence tending to show that plaintiff was previously suffering from Bright's disease, an instruction that if before or since the injury the plaintiff was afflicted with Bright's disease, or is now suffering therefrom, he is not entitled to recover for the pain or disability so caused, was improperly refused. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Hall (Tex.) 92 S. W. 1079, 1080.

The "proximate cause" of an event must be understood to be that which in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new and independent cause, produces that event and without which such event would not have occurred. Proximity in point of time or space, however, is not part of the definition. The test by which to determine whether the intervening act of an intelligent agent which has become the efficient cause of an injury shall be considered a new and independent cause, breaking the sequence of events put in motion by the original or primary negligence, is whether the intervening act and the resultant injury is one that the author of the primary negligence could have reasonably foreseen and expected. Harton v. Forest City Telephone Co., 54 S. E. 299, 301, 302, 141 N. C. 455.

"The term 'proximate cause,' in the sense in which it is ordinarily used, means the efficient cause which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new and independent cause, produced that event, and without which that event would not have occurred." Where the negligence of a master contributes with the negligence of a servant to cause injury to another servant, such concurrent negligence on the part of the master and of the servant is the "proximate cause" of the injury, and the master is liable therefor; but, where the negligence of the servant is such as to have caused the injury even had the master not been negligent, then the servant's negligence is the sole cause of the injury, and the master is not liable. Gila Valley, G. & N. Ry. Co. v. Lyon, 80 Pac. 337, 340, 9 Ariz. 218.

"Proximate cause" is that cause which in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces the result complained of, and without which that result would not have occurred. By "proximate cause" is intended an act which directly produced or concurred directly to produce the injury, and a hole in the street pavement between the street car tracks, into which plaintiff's bicycle ran by which he was thrown in front of a street car and run over, was the proximate cause of his injury, though the management of the car may also have been negligent. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Springer, 93 N. E. 707, 709, 47 Ind. App. 35.

The "proximate cause" of injury is that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by independent causes, produces the injury, and without which it would not have occurred; proximity as to time or space being unimportant except as showing proximity of causation. Two agencies, acting independently of each other, may jointly and concurrently be the proximate cause of an injury when it would not have happened except for a concurrence at approximately the same time and place of the two negligent acts. Where decedent, through defects in a street rendering it unsafe for travel, was thrown from his wagon upon a street car track immediately in front of a car running at a dangerous and negligent rate of speed, and was thereby killed, the negligence of both the city and the street railway company could be deemed the proximate cause of the death. City of Louisville v. Hart's Adm'r, 136 S. W. 212, 215, 143 Ky. 171, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207 (citing Shear. & R. Neg. § 26).

The "proximate cause" of death is that cause which in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produced death, and without which cause that death would not have occurred. Intestate sustained a dislocated shoulder by a fall on defendant's steamship due to defendant's alleged negligence, after which he went to a hospital, where he was given chloroform unnecessarily prior to the reduction of the dislocation. During this operation, intestate died from paralysis of the heart solely due to the chloroform; the injury not being such of itself, independent of the chloroform, as would have caused death. Held, that the unnecessary giving of the chloroform, for which defendant was not responsible, and not the injury, was the proximate cause of intestate's death, precluding recovery for death under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 1902, authorizing a recovery of damages for a wrongful act, neglect, or default by which decedent's death was caused. Mella v. Northern S. S. Co., 162 Fed. 499, 502.

"The 'proximate cause' of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continual sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred. Proximity in point of time or space, however, is no part of the definition. That is of no importance, except as it may afford evidence for or against proximity of causation; that is, the proximate cause which is nearest in the order of responsible causation." Defendant telephone company rented two rooms in a building, one of which was used as an exchange, and the back room for storing materials. The owners of the building employed a carpenter to put up a partition next to the storeroom, in order to accomplish which it was necessary to remove the materials stored therein, and in doing so the carpenter ordered his assistant to remove a box of dynamite from the shelves. Such assistant carried the box into the common hallway, and placed it in a corner near the doorway of defendant's operating room, where, from some unknown cause, it was exploded, injuring plaintiff's decedent, who was at the time in defendant's operating room in the performance of her duties as one of defendant's operators. Held, that the proximate cause of such injury was the negligence of the carpenter's assistant in placing the box where he did, and not the negligence of the company in storing the dynamite in its storeroom. Georgetown Telephone Co. v. McCullough's Adm'r, 80 S. W. 782, 783, 118 Ky. 182, 111 Am. St. Rep. 294 (quoting and adopting definition in Shear. & R. Neg. (5th Ed.) § 26).

That only is a "proximate cause" of an event, juridically considered, which, in a natural sequence, unbroken by any new and intervening cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred. It must be an efficient act of causation separated from its effect by no other act of causation. If, after an act of omission constituting negligence on the part of one injured at a railroad crossing, the railroad car or cars might have been so controlled, by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence on the part of those in charge of them, as to avoid the injury, then a failure to exercise such care and prudence would be an intervening cause, and the plaintiff's negligence no longer a proximate cause, and therefore not a bar to his recovery. Smith v. Connecticut Ry. & Lighting Co., 67 Atl. 888, 889, 80 Conn. 268, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707 (citing Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 408, 429, 36 L. Ed. 485; Parkinson v. Concord St. Ry., 51 Atl. 268, 71 N. H. 28; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 27 Conn. 393, 404-413, 71 Am. Dec. 78).

The "proximate cause" of an event is that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces that event, and without which the event would not have occurred. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, providing that "every corporation shall be liable for all damages sustained by any servant or employé thereof engaged in the work of operating the cars, locomotives, or trains of such corporation, by reason of the negligence of any other servant of such corporation, and the fact that such servants or employés were fellow servants with each other, shall not impair or destroy such liability," the negligence of a railroad foreman in requiring the employés under him to run a hand car on the time of a passenger train over the same track, and in close proximity to such train, is negligence of the company which a jury were warranted in finding was the proximate cause of injury to one of such employés, incurred in assisting to remove the hand car from the track on the approach of the train. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Stevens, 83 S. W. 235, 237, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 80.

The "proximate cause" is the one which in the natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by an intervening cause, produces the injury, and without which the result would not have happened. And it is not enough that the injury is the natural consequence of the negligence; it must be also the probable consequence which might have been foreseen by a man of ordinary prudence. So that where defendant railroad company negligently permitted cattle infected with Texas fever to escape from its right of way to the adjoining highways, one of which led to a pasture from which plaintiff derived profits which were thereafter lost when the state veterinarian placed the highways under quarantine without lawful authority, and from the fact that the diseased cattle had been thereon, plaintiff's patrons would not permit their animals to be driven to the pasture, there being no way by which it could be reached, except over the highway, the injury was not a natural and probable consequence of the negligent acts which might have been foreseen by a man of ordinary prudence, and plaintiff could not recover. Wilson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 108 S. W. 590, 592, 129 Mo. App. 658 (quoting and adopting definition in Saxton v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 72 S. W. 717, 98 Mo. App. 494).

"Proximate cause" is defined to be "that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred." But the sequence is not broken by reason of contributory or concurring causes. Thus there was liability, where plaintiff, as was his custom, started to cross a bridge from the north in the company of and riding behind another wheelman. They were moving along the easterly edge of the bridge, and, when nearly opposite the point from which a rail had disappeared, overtook three pedestrians traveling in the same direction, gave them warning of the approach, and two of the three persons walking stepped to the right and one to the left. The leading wheelman passed, when one of the two, who had stepped to the right, returned to the center of the path, not appreciating that another wheel was coming. A collision occurred. The plaintiff was thrown from his wheel over the side of the wall at the place where there was no proper guard or railing on the bridge. Schell v. Town of German Flatts, 104 N. Y. Supp. 116, 118, 120, 54 Misc. Rep. 445 (quoting and adopting definition in Shear & R. Neg. § 26).

"Proximate cause" is "that which in a natural and continual sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred; and the act of one person cannot be said to be the proximate cause of an injury when the act of another person has intervened and directly inflicted it." Where defendant telephone company maintained a wire for over two years across a public street from an old brick chimney on a low building to another building at a considerable elevation, 200 feet away, and during the construction of a building the wire was struck by the boom of a derrick, operated by workmen engaged on the building, causing the chimney to be pulled over into the street, a part of which struck plaintiff, causing the injuries complained of, though the telephone company was negligent in maintaining its wire on the chimney, which inspection would have shown to have become unsound, its failure to inspect was not the proximate cause of the fall of the chimney, but it was the intervention of the derrick boom carelessly allowed to swing out into the street which caused the accident to occur, and plaintiff injured by the fall of the chimney cannot maintain an action therefor against the telephone company. Leeds v. New York Tel. Co., 70 N. E. 219, 220, 178 N. Y. 118 (quoting and adopting definition in Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L. R. A. 216).

The "proximate cause" of an event must be understood to be that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produced the event, and without which the event would not have occurred. Where several acts are charged as negligence, and it is apparent that one of them disconnected from the others could not in and of itself have been the direct or "proximate cause," its submission by the court in its charge as a ground for recovery is unauthorized. A passenger on finding that the ticket agent was not in his office, boarded a train without a ticket. An employé in charge of the train requested him to alight and procure a ticket. The agent on being asked for one directed him to board the train, which was then in motion. The absence of the agent from his office was not the "proximate cause" of an injury sustained by the passenger while attempting to board the moving train, nor was the passenger's act in leaving the train the "proximate cause" of the injury. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Trigo (Tex.) 101 S. W. 254, 256.

The "proximate cause" may be the primary cause so linked and bound to the events succeeding that together they create one continuous whole, one event so operating on the other as to tie the result to the primary cause; but, to justify a finding that such act is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of attending circumstances. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Murray (Tex.) 132 S. W. 496, 497.

Where a person's injuries were received from a fire negligently set by a railway company, the chain of causation between its negligence and the injuries was not broken by the person's removal from the building set on fire just prior to her return to the building, after which the injuries were received. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Hinton, 40 South. 988, 989, 146 Ala. 273.

An operator of a machine in attempting to suddenly stop it by drawing his foot from the treadle in the usual way, slipped and was injured because his foot, instead of reaching the floor struck against the pulley of another machine placed too near him. He had complained to the foreman of the proximity of the latter machine and had been urged to continue work, with the assurance that it was not dangerous and that the machine would be moved the following day. Held, that the proximate cause of the accident was the proximity of the machine, authorizing a recovery, the "proximate cause" of an injury being that cause which in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by an intervening cause, produces the injury, the efficient cause or the one that necessarily sets other causes in operation. Holman v. E. E. Souther Iron Co., 133 S. W. 379, 382, 152 Mo. App. 672.

The "proximate cause" of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred. A complaint, alleging that defendant railroad violated an ordinance prohibiting a railroad from blocking any public street for more than five minutes at a time, whereby plaintiff's team, when near the crossing, became frightened and ran away, injuring plaintiff, was demurrable, as not showing any causal connection between the violation of the ordinance and the injuries. Wilson v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 40 South. 941, 942, 146 Ala. 285, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987 (quoting and adopting definition in Shear. & R. Neg.; citing Western Ry. of Alabama v. Mutch, 11 South. 894, 97 Ala. 194, 21 L. R. A. 316, 38 Am. St. Rep. 179, and other cases).

Direct or immediate cause

"Proximate cause" of an injury is the immediate cause. Joslin v. Linder, 128 N. W. 500, 502, 26 S. D. 420.

Defining proximate cause as the "direct" cause is error, as it may be the indirect cause. Wheeler v. Milner, 118 N. W. 187, 188, 137 Wis. 28.

"Proximate cause" is the direct cause, without which injuries would not have occurred. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 908, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536 (citing Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Black [Tex.] 44 S. W. 673); Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Averill (Tex.) 136 S. W. 98, 100; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Beard, 93 S. W. 532, 533, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 427.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is that act or omission which immediately causes and without which the injury would not have happened, notwithstanding other conditions or omissions concurred therewith. Miller v. Kelly Coal Co., 145 Ill. App. 452.

A "proximate cause" is one that leads to or produces or directly contributes to produce the result or loss. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Milton, 43 South. 496, 500, 53 Fla. 484, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 560, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1077.

By "proximate cause" is intended an act which directly produced or concurred in directly producing the injury. Claypool v. Wigmore, 71 N. E. 509, 510, 84 Ind. App. 35 (citing Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, to Use of Trainor, 33 Md. 543).

A "proximate cause" is one that directly causes or contributes directly to cause the result, without any independent efficient cause intervening between the cause and the resulting injury. Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. Wade, 43 South. 775, 776, 53 Fla. 620.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is that act or omission which immediately causes the injury, and it is enough if it is the efficient cause that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. Pierson v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 100 Pac. 999, 1001, 52 Wash. 595.

"Proximate cause" means a cause that immediately precedes and produces the effect, as distinguished from the remote, mediate, or predisposing cause. Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 96 S. W. 670, 671, 120 Mo. App. 168 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Int. Dict.).

"Proximate cause" is defined to be "that cause which immediately precedes and directly produces an effect as distinguished from a remote, mediate, or predisposing cause." "Immediate; nearest; next in order." The maxim of the law is, "Causa proxima, non remota, spectatur." It is said and well settled that a party is not responsible "in respect of mischief which could by no possibility have been foreseen, and which no reasonable person would have anticipated." An act is the proximate cause of an event when in the natural order of things, and under the particular circumstances surrounding it, such an act would necessarily produce that event. In negligence all courts, both in England and America, construe "proximate cause" as a cause from which a man of ordinary experience and capacity could see that the results might probably ensue. Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Budin, 40 Pac. 503, 504, 6 Colo. App. 275 (citing Broom, Leg. Max. 386; Shear. & R. Neg. 11; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 399, 98 Am. Dec. 175; Bennett v. Lockwood [N. Y.] 20 Wend. 223, 32 Am. Dec. 532; McGrew v. Stone, 53 Pa. 436).

"A 'proximate cause' is one from which the injury follows as a direct and immediate consequence. It is the dominant cause—the one that necessarily sets the other causes in motion." The failure of the court to specifically define in its instructions the distinction between proximate and remote causes is not reversible error, where the jury are told that to authorize a recovery the defendant must not only have been negligent, but the negligence must have been the "direct cause" of the injury complained of. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie, 135 Fed. 465, 473, 68 C. C. A. 177.

"Proximate cause" need not necessarily be the immediate cause, which may be merely an instrument of the dominant or efficient cause. Richmond Coal Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., Limited, of London, England, 159 Fed. 985, 987.

"The 'proximate cause' is not necessarily the immediate, near, or nearest cause, but the one that acts first, whether immediate to the injury, or such injury be reached by setting other causes in motion, each in order being started naturally by the one that precedes it, and altogether constituting a complete chain or succession of events, so united to each other by a close causal connection as to form a natural whole, reaching from the first or producing cause to the final result." Cary v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of New York, 106 N. W. 1055, 1056, 127 Wis. 67, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 926, 115 Am. St. Rep. 997, 7 Ann. Cas. 484 (quoting and adopting definition in Delsenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co., 72 N. W. 735, 97 Wis. 288).

When an injury can be traced directly to a tortious act, and but for this tortious act it could not reasonably be supposed that the injury would have resulted, this essentially antecedent act may be said to be the "proximate cause" of the injury. Southern Ry. Co. v. Daughdrill, 75 S. E. 925, 928, 11 Ga. App. 603.

An instruction that "proximate cause is the immediate, as contradistinguished from an intermediate, cause," is not subject to the objection that it does not clearly and fully express the law relating to proximate cause. Snipes v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 959, 960, 76 S. C. 207 (citing State v. Adams, 47 S. E. 676, 68 S. C. 421).

"Whatever combination of causes may be charged as having resulted in an injury, the author of one of them can only be held liable when his act or negligence was the 'proximate cause,' for, if it was remote and did not directly contribute to the injury, no liability attaches. It is the proximate and not the remote that the law recognizes." Edd v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 71 Pac. 215, 216, 25 Utah, 293.

To constitute contributory negligence a "proximate cause," it must in the nature of things have some direct and material relation to the injury. Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Edwards, 74 N. E. 533, 534, 36 Ind. App. 202; (citing Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 7; Toledo & W. Ry. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185; Pennsylvania Co. v. Sinclair, 62 Ind. 301, 30 Am. Rep. 185).

In order for contributory negligence to have been the "proximate cause" of an accident, it must have been simultaneous in its operation with that of the defendant, of the same kind, immediately growing out of the same transaction, and not something distinct and independent of a prior date. Vizacchero

v. Rhode Island Co., 59 Atl. 105, 107, 26 B. L. 392, 69 L. R. A. 188 (quoting Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 27 Conn. 293, 71 Am. Dec. 78).

What constitutes "proximate cause" has been so often fully explained that it must be assumed that it is understood by the bench and bar. It is just as erroneous to say that the proximate cause is the direct cause when used in connection with the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, as when used in connection with defendant's negligence. Mauch v. City of Hartford, 87 N. W. 816, 823, 112 Wis. 40.

"Proximate cause" is any act or omission that immediately produces or fails to prevent the injury, or that which directly puts into operation another agency or force, or interposes an obstacle whereby injury is inflicted that would not have happened except for the negligent act or omission. Wells v. Great Northern R. Co., 114 Pac. 92, 95, 50 Or. 165, 84 L. R. A. (N. S.) 818, 825 (citing 32 Cyc. p. 745; Hartvig v. N. P. Lumber Co., 25 Pac. 358, 19 Or. 522; Ahern v. Oregon Telephone & Telegraph Co., 33 Pac. 403, 35 Pac. 549, 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 635; Robinson v. Taku Fishing Co., 71 Pac. 790, 42 Or. 537).

"Proximate cause" is that act which immediately causes or fails to prevent an injury that might reasonably have been anticipated as a result of the negligent act or omission charged, and without which such injury would not have occurred, the test being found in the probable injurious consequences which were to be anticipated, and not in the number of subsequent events or agencies which might arise to bring such consequences about. Balzer v. Warring, 95 N. E. 257, 260, 176 Ind. 585.

The "proximate cause" of an accident is the immediate cause, or that without which it would not have happened. It is not the remote cause or the occasion of the accident, and, where the original wrong only becomes injurious because of the intervention of some distinct wrongful act of another, the injury is imputed to the last wrong as the proximate cause. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Keiffer, 113 S. W. 433, 435, 132 Ky. 419.

"Proximate cause" means a direct and moving cause; that is, one without which the things complained of would not have occurred. Defendant's requested instruction, in an action against a railroad for injuries, that if the jury believed that plaintiff's decedent died from heart failure, or did not believe from a preponderance of evidence that he died from a stroke of apoplexy proximately caused by defendant's negligence, they should find for defendant, was properly refused, where the main charge required the jury to find affirmatively that decedent's death was proximately caused by injuries received by him as complained of. St. Louis

Southwestern R. Co. v. Burke, 81 S. W. 774, 775, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 222.

Dominant cause

The "proximate cause" is the dominant cause, the one which necessarily sets the other causes in motion. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Coutourie, 135 Fed. 465, 473, 68 C. C. A. 177.

"The 'proximate cause' is the dominant cause, not the one which is incidental to that cause, its mere instrument, though the latter may be nearest in time to the injury." Bell v. Rocheford, 113 N. W. 157, 158, 78 Neb. 310.

"'Proximate cause' means the dominant efficient cause without which the injury would not have occurred." Bryan v. Hilton Lumber Co., 70 S. E. 936, 938, 154 N. C. 485 (quoting and adopting definition in Harvell v. Weldon Lumber Co., 70 S. E. 391, 154 N. C. 254).

"Proximate cause" means the dominant, efficient cause; a cause without which the injury would not have occurred, and if the negligence of defendant continues until the time of the injury and the injury would not have occurred but for such negligence, it is not made remote because some act not within the control of defendant and not amounting to contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff concurs in causing the injury. Harvell v. Weldon Lumber Co., 70 S. E. 389, 391, 154 N. C. 254.

A request to charge that the term "proximate cause" meant the first or efficient cause, and if the jury found that there were several causes contributing to decedent's death, then the proximate cause was the cause coming first which set in motion the other causes producing the accident, was properly refused as susceptible of an interpretation that, if decedent was negligent in crossing defendant's tracks in front of an approaching train, his act was necessarily the proximate cause of the accident, and as overlooking the rule that the proximate cause is the dominant cause from which the injury follows as a direct and immediate consequence; that an act prior in time is not necessarily the proximate cause of an injury, unless the injury is the natural and probable consequence of such act, to be reasonably anticipated therefrom, or if the injury could not have happened but for the intervention of a sufficient and independent cause operating between the first negligent act and the injury. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Kountz, 168 Fed. 832, 837, 94 C. C. A. 244.

Efficient cause

The "proximate cause" of an injury is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. Comer v. Meyer, 74 Atl. 497, 499, 78 N. J. Law, 464, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597; Batton v. Public Service Corp. of New Jersey, 69 Atl. 164, 165, 75 N. J. Law, 857, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640, 127 Am. St. Rep. 855; Holman v. E. E.

Souther Iron Co., 133 S. W. 379, 382, 152 Mo. App. 672; Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Powers, 88 N. E. 1073, 1077, 173 Ind. 105 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5758, 5759); Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Acree, 82 N. E. 1009, 1011, 42 Ind. App. 127.

The "proximate cause" is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental, or instruments of a superior or controlling agency, are not the "proximate causes" and the responsible ones, though they may be nearer in time to the result. It is only when the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is, of course, to be charged with the disaster. San Francisco & P. S. Co. v. Carlson, 161 Fed. 851, 853, 89 C. C. A. 45 (citing and adopting definition in Aetna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 130, 24 L. Ed. 395); Demoli v. United States, 144 Fed. 363, 366, 75 C. C. A. 365, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 424, 7 Ann. Cas. 121 (quoting and adopting definition in Aetna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 130, 24 L. Ed. 395); Frisbie v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 112 S. W. 1024, 1025, 133 Mo. App. 30.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is such cause as operates to produce particular consequences without the intervention of any independent or unforeseen cause without which the injury could not have occurred. Strobeck v. Bren, 101 N. W. 795, 796, 93 Minn. 428; Hendrix v. Cooleemee Cotton Mills, 50 S. E. 561, 562, 138 N. C. 169; Pendroy v. Great Northern R. Co., 117 N. W. 531-536, 17 N. D. 433.

It is a requisite of "proximate cause" of an injury that it did produce it. Hayes v. Southern R. Co., 53 S. E. 847, 848, 141 N. C. 195.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is the cause which sets in motion the things causing the injury. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Keiter, 92 N. E. 982, 985, 175 Ind. 268.

The "proximate cause" of a fire is the efficient cause which puts the other causes into motion. Hocking v. British America Assur. Co. of Toronto, Canada, 113 Pac. 259, 260, 62 Wash. 73, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 965.

"Proximate cause," in a legal sense, is the efficient cause, or that cause which starts the train of circumstances leading to the injury complained of, and, in legal contemplation, that may be a cause of a particular occurrence, which fails to prevent it, as well as those acts which actively work to produce it. Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Lulu (Ind.), 92 N. E. 993, 995.

"Proximate cause" is the efficient cause, or that which originates and sets in motion the dominating agency that necessarily proceeds through other causes as mere instruments or vehicles in the natural lines of causation to the result in controversy. Chicago,

& E. R. Co. v. Dinius, 84 N. E. 9, 12, 170 Ind. 222.

An efficient and adequate cause of an injury may be deemed the real or proximate cause thereof, unless another cause, not incidental to such cause, but independent of it, has intervened, and caused the injury in question. Davis v. Mercer Lumber Co., 73 N. E. 899, 903, 164 Ind. 413.

In actions for injuries to employes, the "proximate cause" of the injury is not necessarily the immediate cause, but it must be the "efficient cause," which is that cause that sets in motion the general circumstances leading up to the injury. Columbia Creosoting Co. v. Beard (Ind.) 99 N. E. 823, 825.

Contributory negligence is the "proximate cause" of an injury, if the injury would not have occurred had the negligent act not been committed. Atoka Coal & Mining Co. v. Miller, 104 S. W. 555, 561, 7 Ind. T. 104.

Where the accident complained of would have occurred, though there had not been any negligence of a person, his negligence is not the "proximate cause" of the accident. O'Connell v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 181 S. W. 117, 149 Mo. App. 501.

There may be more than one "proximate cause" of an accident, if each was an efficient one, without which the injury resulting would not have occurred. Sweet v. Perkins, 90 N. E. 50, 51, 196 N. Y. 482.

A definition of "proximate cause" as the efficient cause from which the injury follows, in unbroken sequence without any intervening cause to break the continuity, is incorrect. Eichmann v. Buchheit, 107 N. W. 325, 326, 128 Wis. 385, 8 Ann. Cas. 435 (citing Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co., 72 N. W. 735, 97 Wis. 279, 286; Feldschneider v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 99 N. W. 1034, 122 Wis. 423).

It is erroneous to define "proximate," in charging as to the proximate cause of the injury, as meaning efficient or material. Boyce v. Wilbur Lumber Co., 97 N. W. 563, 566, 119 Wis. 642.

An instruction, that "by the term 'proximate cause' * * * is meant the efficient cause which produces the injury as a natural and probable result," is not objectionable in failing to use the words "that which acts first," after the words "efficient cause." Roedler v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 88, 91, 129 Wis. 270.

In an action for negligence causing death, an instruction, relating to the cause of death, that by "proximate cause" as used in the charge is meant a cause without which the thing complained of would not have occurred, while not strictly accurate in that it was not sufficiently comprehensive, yet it presented the test of "proximate cause" in its application to the case. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Heard (Tex.) 91 S. W. 371, 374.

The "proximate cause" is ascertained by determining the responsible cause, without regard to its time or place, in the succession of events resulting in an injury, and it is not material whether such cause is the first or last in the succession of events, provided it is the responsible cause; and where an original wrongful act supplies the condition by which a subsequent act is rendered injurious the one committing the wrongful act is responsible. Peru Heating Co. v. Lenhart, 95 N. E. 680, 684, 48 Ind. App. 319.

"Proximate cause," so far as applicable to personal injury cases, is defined as "the efficient cause; that which acts first and produces the injury as a natural and probable result, under such circumstances that he who is responsible for such cause as a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence ought reasonably to foresee that personal injury to another may probably follow from such person's conduct." Feldschneider v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 99 N. W. 1034, 1037, 122 Wis. 423 (quoting Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co., 72 N. W. 735, 97 Wis. 279).

Where the primary cause of an injury is a pure accident, occasioned without fault of the injured party, if the negligent act of the defendant is a co-operating or culminating cause of the injury, or if the accident would not have resulted in the injury excepting for the negligent act, the negligence is the "proximate cause" of the injury, for which damages may be recovered. Birsch v. Citizens' Electric Co., 93 Pac. 940, 943, 36 Mont. 574 (quoting and adopting definition in Goe v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 71 Pac. 182, 30 Wash. 654).

In an action for damages on account of negligence, the "proximate cause" is the real or efficient cause unless another not incidental to it, but independent thereof, appears to have intervened and caused the accident. "Proximate cause" is an essential element of recovery in such an action; the rule being that what is the proximate cause of the injury is not a question of science or legal knowledge, but is to be determined ordinarily as a question of fact by the jury. Davis v. Mercer Lumber Co., 73 N. E. 899, 900, 903, 164 Ind. 413.

In determining what kind of cause is to be deemed "proximate," within the meaning of an insurance policy, the law will not go farther back in the line of causation than to find the active, efficient, procuring cause of which the event under consideration is a natural and probable consequence, in view of the existing circumstances and conditions. The law does not consider the cause of causes, beyond seeking the efficient predominant cause, which, following it no farther than those consequences that might have been an-anticipated as not unlikely to result from it, has produced the effect. An injury which might naturally produce death in a person of a certain temperament or state of health is the cause of his death if he dies by reason of it, even if he would not have died if his temperament or previous health had been different; and this is so as well when death comes through the medium of a disease directly induced by the injury, as when the injury immediately interrupts the vital processes. Continental Casualty Co. v. Lloyd, 73 N. E. 824, 828, 165 Ind. 52.

An instruction that "proximate cause" meant the efficient or inducing cause, the cause acting directly and producing injury or which set in motion other causes producing such injury, there being an intimate and close causal relation between the first cause and the final result, that in either case such producing cause was held to reach to the injury and be, in a legal sense, proximate to it, was erroneous, since it authorized the jury to find that defendant's negligence was the "proximate cause" of plaintiff's injury if the relation between them was casual, whereas the relation must be that of cause and effect in natural sequence of events, and not mere coincidence of time and place, which relation is properly described as "causal" and not as "casual." Dehsoy v. Milwaukee Electric Railway & Light Co., 85 N. W. 973, 974, 110 Wis. 412.

The "proximate cause" is the efficient cause, the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental or instruments of a superior or controlling agency are not the proximate causes and the responsible ones, though they may be nearer in time to the result. It is only when the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is, of course, to be charged with the disaster. The "proximate cause" of an injury is that cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause, produces the injury, and without which the result would not have occurred. The negligence of a servant does not excuse the master from liability to a co-servant for an injury which would not have happened had the master performed his duty. Kremer v. New York Edison Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 883, 888, 102 App. Div. 433 (quoting and adopting definitions in Ætna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 130, 24 L. Ed. 396; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 63 Fed. 400, 11 C. C. A. 253, 27 L. R. A. 583, 586; citing The G. R. Booth, 19 Sup. Ct. 9, 171 U. S. 450, 458, 43 L. Ed. 234; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256).

"Where a negligent act or omission sets in operation a train of occurrences resulting naturally in the injury complained of, such negligent act or omission is deemed to have been the proximate cause or to have contributed thereto." Where defendant threw dynamite caps upon vacant ground, where, as defendant knew, children picked them up, and exploded them by throwing them against rocks, etc., and a boy who had found a battery back of an automobile garage exploded a cap taken by him by means of the battery, whereby he was injured, defendant was liable, as its negligence was the "proximate cause." Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Machinery Co., 92 Pac. 908, 904, 48 Wash. 97, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 586.

The negligence in starting up a street car while one was boarding it, throwing him onto the ground, where he was run over by a truck, is a "proximate cause" of the injury, making the street railway company liable, notwithstanding the concurrent negligence of the driver of the truck; the negligence of the employes of the company being an efficient cause of the injury. Fine v. Interurban St. R. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 43, 45, 45 Misc. Rep. 587.

A telephone company negligently permitted its wires to remain suspended near a trolley wire carrying a powerful current of electricity. During a storm the telephone wire became detached from a tree, and came in contact with the trolley wire becoming heavily charged. A driver, exercising proper care, drove his horses against the telephone wire, and they were killed by electricity. Held, that the negligence of the telephone company was the proximate cause of the death of the horses; the "proximate cause" of an injury being the responsible cause, the cause which is the active, operative, continuing, and natural source of the injury, or that which is the moving cause and without which the injury would not have occurred, though subsequent events aided in bringing about the result. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Kranz, 95 N. E. 371, 373, 48 Ind. App. 67.

Where the court in a negligence case charged that the proximate cause was not necessarily the cause closest in point of time to the injury complained of, but was the cause which set in motion the things causing the injury, the refusal to charge that proximate cause was the inducing cause, or the act which set in motion the chain of circumstances operating in a continuous and uninterrupted sequence which produced the injury, was not erroneous. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Kelter, 92 N. E. 982, 985, 175 Ind. 268.

"First cause," "initial cause," "efficient cause," and "proximate cause" all mean the same thing in the law of negligence. They mean the cause acting first and immediately producing the injury, or setting other causes in motion, all constituting a natural and continuous chain of events each having a close causal connection with its immediate predecessor; the final event in the chain immediately effecting the injury as a natural and probable result of the cause which first acted, and the person responsible for the first event having reasonable ground to expect at the moment of his act or default that a personal injury to some person might probably result therefrom. There may be pre-existing conditions or events without which the final injury could not have happened, such as the momentary shying of a horse on a defective highway, the inadvertent and nonnegligent misstep of a traveler into a dangerous excavation close to the sidewalk, or the nonnegligent misstep or slip upon the floor or passage; but none of these is to be deemed a cause of the final injury any more than the mere presence of the injured person on the scene of the accident. They are not links, either initial or otherwise, in the legal chain of responsible causation, and should not be referred to as such, even though in ordinary nonlegal parlance they might broadly be termed causes. They are mere circumstances or conditions either existing, or to be expected in the natural order of things to occur at any time; and they do not enter into the chain of responsible causation. Winchel v. Goodyear, 105 N. W. 824, 827, 126 Wis. 271.

"Proximate cause" is the efficient cause—the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental or instruments of a superior or controlling agency are not the proximate causes and the responsible ones. An act, to constitute the proximate cause of an injury, must have been so connected with the injury that injury would naturally and probably result therefrom, and the result must have been so apparent at the time that it could reasonably be foreseen. It must be established that there was a causal connection between the act and injury, and that the causal connection had not been broken by the interposition of an independent force that took advantage of the situation to accomplish something not the probable or natural effect of the situation as it existed. The act of an employé, charged with the duty of operating engines, in leaving an engine unguarded, is not the proximate cause of an injury resulting from a third person causing the engine to move, unless it could be said that the injury could have been reasonably anticipated or foreseen. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickens, 103 S. W. 750, 755, 7 Ind. T. 18.

"Proximate cause" is such as operates to produce particular consequences without the intervention of any independent unforeseen cause without which the injuries would not have occurred, and the act complained of must be such as a reasonably prudent person would have foreseen as likely to result in injury to another." Where, in an action for injuries to a passenger while alighting from a train, the court correctly defined proximate cause, and charged that unless defendant was negligent as charged, and plaintiff's fall was proximately caused by the negligence of defendant's employes, plaintiff could not recover, and that plaintiff's injuries must have been the direct and proximate result of defendant's failure to stop the train a reasonably sufficient length of time, defendant was not prejudiced by the refusal to charge that if plaintiff while alighting was interfered with by a passenger boarding the train, and that such interference was the cause of plaintiff's fall, he could not recover. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Bryant, 103 S. W. 237, 238, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 601.

Foreseen or expected result

"Proximate cause" is defined generally as the cause which leads to or may naturally be expected to produce the result. Palmer v. Portland Ry., Light & Power Co., 103 Pac. 211, 213, 56 Or. 262; Doyle v. Southern Pac. Co., 108 Pac. 201, 208, 56 Or. 495; Elliff v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 99 Pac. 76, 79, 53 Or. 66.

The requisites of "proximate cause" are the doing or omitting an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee might naturally or probably produce the injury, and that such act or omission did produce it. Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Kiser, 54 S. E. 889, 892, 105 Va. 695; Wilson v. Southern R. Co., 62 S. E. 972, 973, 108 Va. 822.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is one which any man of ordinary prudence could foresee that such result was probable under all the facts as they existed. Ramsbottom v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 50 S. E. 448, 449, 138 N. C. 38.

The "proximate cause" of an injury may be such a negligent act as actively aids in producing the injury as a direct and existing concurrent cause, and such as might reasonably be expected to result therein. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bellar, 112 S. W. 323, 326, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

"In determining the cause of liability in negligence cases, 'proximate cause' is construed as a cause from which a man with ordinary experience could foresee that the result might ensue." Haskell & Barker Car Co. v. Prezedziankowski, 83 N. E. 626, 631, 170 Ind. 1, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 972, 127 Am. St. Rep. 352.

An act complained of to constitute "probable cause" must be such as a reasonably prudent person would foresee as likely to result in injury to another. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Bryant, 103 S. W. 237, 238, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 601.

For an act to constitute "probable cause" of an injury, the result must have been so apparent at the time that it could reasonably be foreseen. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickens, 103 S. W. 750, 755, 7 Ind. T. 16.

"Proximate cause" has been defined as the doing or omitting to do an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee would naturally or probably produce the injury. House v. Southern R. Co., 67 S. E. 981, 982, 152 N. C. 397.

"Proximate cause" of a negligent injury is a want of ordinary care which actively aids in directly producing the injury which might reasonably have been contemplated under the attending circumstances. A. Cohen & Co. v. Rittmann (Tex.) 139 S. W. 59, 61.

"Proximate cause" is that which naturally leads to or contributes directly to produce a result which might be expected by any reasonable man as likely to directly follow the performance or nonperformance of any act. Moore v. Lanier, 42 South. 462, 465, 52 Fla. 353.

"Proximate cause" is that which naturally leads to or produces or contributes directly to produce a result such as might be expected by any reasonable and prudent man is likely to directly and naturally follow or flow out of the performance or nonperformance of any act. Williams v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 48 South. 209, 211, 56 Fla. 735, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 131 Am. St. Rep. 169.

To warrant a finding that negligence is the "proximate cause" of an injury, it must appear that the injury ought to have been foreseen as likely to occur by a person of ordinary prudence. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Schubert (Tex.) 130 S. W. 708, 709.

"Proximate cause" is the doing or omitting to do an act which a person of ordinary prudence could foresee might naturally or probably produce the injury complained of and such act or omission actually causes the injury. It is the last negligent act without which the injury would not have resulted. Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 49 S. E. 885, 886, 137 N. C. 392 (citing Coley v. City of Statesville, 28 S. E. 482, 121 N. C. 301; Schwartz v. Shull, 31 S. E. 914, 45 W. Va. 405).

It is not necessary that the "proximate" result be one which could be anticipated in detail. Cavanaugh v. Centerville Block Coal Co., 109 N. W. 303, 306, 131 Iowa, 700, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

It is not necessary that the particular injury resulting from a negligent act be foreseen to make the negligence the "proximate cause" of the injury. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Acrea, 82 N. E. 1009, 1012, 42 Ind. App. 127.

To constitute "proximate cause," it is not necessary that the precise injury should have been foreseen or apprehended as certain to occur. But it is sufficient if an ordinarily careful person ought, under the circumstances, to have foreseen that injury might probably result. Coolidge v. Hallauer, 105 N. W. 568, 578, 126 Wis. 244 (citing Meyer v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co., 98 N. W. 6, 116 Wis. 386).

Where negligence is admitted or otherwise proved, and the injuries are immediate and flow directly from the negligent act, the guilty person will not be excused because the particular circumstances are unusual and could not ordinarily have been foreseen. Fusselman v. Wabash R. Co., 122 S. W. 1137, 1139, 139 Mo. App. 198.

It is said and well settled that a party is not responsible "in respect of mischief which could by no possibility have been foreseen, and which no reasonable person would have anticipated." In negligence, all courts, both in England and America, construe "proximate cause" as a cause from which a man of ordinary experience and capacity could see that the result might probably ensue. Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Budin, 40 Pac. 503, 504, 6 Colo. App. 275.

It is not necessary, to make one liable for negligent injuries, that he should have anticipated the particular accident if he negligently permitted conditions to exist or continue from which it might reasonably have been anticipated that some injury to another would result, and the resulting injury is the natural and reasonable consequence of the negligence. Beaning v. South Bend Electric Co., 90 N. E. 786, 792, 45 Ind. App. 261.

The liability of a person charged with negligence does not depend on whether, with the exercise of reasonable prudence, he could or ought to have foreseen the very injury complained of; he being liable for anything which, after the injury is complete, appears to have been a natural or probable consequence of his act or omission. Woodson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 123 S. W. 820, 827, 224 Mo. 685, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 20 Ann. Cas. 1039.

While consequential damages which may be recovered for violation of a statutory duty are such as might reasonably be anticipated by the perpetrator, and must be the natural effect thereof, it is not essential that the wrongdoer may have foreseen the identical injury to the particular person; it being sufficient that the act has a tendency to injure some one, and finally does so, in which case the wrongful act is a "proximate cause." Cleveland, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tauer, 96 N. E. 758, 760, 176 Ind. 621, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 20.

It is not essential to make a negligent act the proximate cause of an injury that the particular injurious consequences and the precise manner of their infliction could reasonably have been foreseen by the wrongdoer; but, where the consequences follow in unbroken sequence from the wrong to the injury without any intervening efficient cause, it is sufficient if, at the time of the negligence, the wrongdoer might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have foreseen that some injury might result from his negligence. Heiting v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 96 N. E. 842, 845, 252 Ill. 466, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 451.

There is an apparent conflict in the judicial definitions of "probable cause." What they mean, we think, is about this: If the injury, whatever it may be, directly and naturally flows from the negligence complained of, the defendant is liable, though the particular injury would not ordinarily be expected to result from such negligence. On the other hand, if the injury is extraordinary and exceptional, such as no man could foresee or provide against, the defendant will not be liable, though the injury would not have happened but for his negligence. If this is a correct interpretation of the language of the cases defining probable cause, then they are harmonious and are useful as guides in applying the doctrine to the facts in every case. Foley v. McMahon, 90 S. W. 113, 114, 114 Mo. App. 442.

Negligence, to be the "proximate cause" of an injury, must be such that a person of ordinary caution and prudence would have foreseen that an injury would likely result therefrom; not that the specific injury would result, but an injury of some character. "It is not necessary that the injury in the precise form in which it in fact resulted should have been foreseen. It is enough that it now appears to have been a natural and probable consequence. In other words, it is not necessary to a defendant's liability, after his negligence has been established, to show, in addition thereto, that the consequence of his negligence could have been foreseen by him; it is sufficient that the injuries are the natural, though not the necessary and inevitable, result of the negligent fault." Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Parry, 73 Pac. 105, 107, 67 Kan. 515 (quoting and adopting definition in Thomp. Neg. § 59).

"Proximate cause" of an injury must produce it under such circumstances that he who is responsible for such cause as a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence ought reasonably to foresee that personal injury to another may probably follow from such person's conduct. Feldschneider v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 99 N. W. 1034, 1037, 122 Wis. 423.

In an action by a passenger for injuries, an instruction defining the term "proximate cause" as that which naturally and probably caused the injury, that is, the cause which leads up to or might naturally be expected to produce the result, was too restricted, for whether it might naturally be expected to produce the result or not, if it was the cause which did produce it, it was the proximate cause. Cleveland & S. W. Traction Co. v. Ward, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 761, 767.

"Negligence is the 'proximate cause' of an injury only when such injury is the natural and probable result of it, and, in the light of attending circumstances, ought to have been foreseen by a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence." Banderob v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 113 N. W. 738, 743, 133 Wis. 249; Lemke v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 136 N. W. 286, 288, 149 Wis. 535.

The injury must have been the natural and probable consequence of the negligent act which an ordinarily prudent person ought reasonably to have foreseen might have occurred as a result of the negligence, and without which the injury would not have occurred, in order to make such act the "proximate cause" of the injury, and if a cause is remote and only furnished the condition or occasion of the injury, it is not the proximate cause thereof. Logan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 129 S. W. 575, 577, 139 Ky. 202.

In order to recover damages for an injury because of negligence, the burden is on plaintiff, not only to show negligence, but to prove that such negligence was the "proximate cause" of the injury; that is, the negligent act must have been the natural and probable cause of the injury, which ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances. Southern Kansas R. Co. of Texas v. Emmett (Tex.) 139 S. W. 44, 47.

Negligence, to be the "proximate cause" of an injury, must be the natural and probable consequence of the negligent or wrongful act, which ought to have been foreseen by a reasonably prudent man in the light of the attending circumstances. Butler v. Gulf Pipe Line Co. (Tex.) 144 S. W. 340, 342.

A "proximate cause" is one that directly causes, or contributes directly to cause, the result, without any independent, efficient cause intervening between the cause and the resulting injury. The particular injuries sustained need not have been in fact contemplated, but the injuries sustained must be such as should have been contemplated as a natural and probable proximate result of the negligence. Florida East Coast R. Co. v. Wade, 43 South. 775-777, 53 Fla. 620 (citing Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular Land, Transp. & Mfg. Co., 9 South. 661, 27 Fla. 1, 157, 17 L. R. A. 33, 65; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256; Moore v. Lanier, 42 South. 462, 52 Fla. 353; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Milton, 43 South. 495, 53 Fla. 484, 11 R. A. [N. S.] 560, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1077; 6 Current Law, 757; Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Williams, 20 South. 558, 37 Fla. 406; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Cosens, 35 South. 398, 46 Fla. 237; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Barwick, 41 South. 70, 51 Fla. 304; Moore, Carriers, p. 877, § 2).

Negligence is the "proximate cause" of an injury when it appears that the "injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. v. Weeks, 83 Pac. 406, 408, 72 Kan. 190, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515 (quoting and adopting Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256).

To warrant a finding that negligence is the proximate cause of an injury, it must generally appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances. Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co. v. Benton, 110 S. W. 1087, 1088, 86 Ark. 289; McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co., 144 Fed. 788, 792, 75 C. C. A. 518.

An instruction, in an action for a servant's injury, that negligence is the "proximate cause" of an injury only when the injury is the natural and probable result of it, and when in the light of attending circumstances it ought to have been foreseen by a person of ordinary care, was proper. Monaghan v. Northwestern Fuel Co., 122 N. W. 1066, 1068, 140 Wis. 457.

In determining what is "proximate cause" the true rule is that the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence, such a consequence as, under the circumstances of the case, might or ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer as likely to flow from his act. Russell v. Westmoreland County, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 425, 429.

"In determining what is 'proximate cause,' the true rule is that the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence; such a consequence as, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, might and ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer as likely to flow from his acts." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Knisel, 96 S. W. 342, 345, 79 Ark. 608 (quoting and adopting definition in Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653).

"The 'proximate' legal cause is that acting first and producing the injury, either immediately or by setting other events in motion, all constituting a natural and continuous chain of events, each having a close causal connection with its immediate predecessor, as a natural and probable result of the cause which first acted, under such circumstances as the person responsible for the first event should as an ordinarily prudent and intelligent person have reasonable ground to expect at the moment of his act or default that an injury to some person might probably result therefrom." Stefanowski v. Chain Belt Co., 109 N. W. 532, 533, 129 Wis. 484, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 955.

"A 'proximate cause' is one that leads to or produces, or directly contributes to producing, the result or loss. If the loss is not such as would likely or probably result from the negligence of defendant, he is not liable, since he can ordinarily be held responsible only for the probable results of his negligence, which he should have foreseen." Western Union Tel. Co. v. Milton, 43 South. 495, 500, 53 Fla. 484, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 560, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1077 (citing Moore v. Lanier, 42 South. 462, 52 Fla. 353; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. Ry. Co. v. Peninsular Land, Transp. & Mfg. Co., 9 South. 661, 27 Fla. 1, 157, 17 L. R. A. 33, 65; Janes v. City of Tampa, 42 South. 729, 52 Fla. 292, 120 Am. St. Rep. 203, 11 Ann. Cas. 510).

To constitute "proximate cause," the injury must be the natural and probable result of the negligence, and be of such a character as an ordinarily prudent person ought to have foreseen might probably occur as the result, though it is not necessary that the negligent person might have foreseen the precise form of the injury. Seith v. Commonwealth Electric Co., 89 N. E. 425, 427, 241 Ill. 252, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978, 132 Am. St. Rep. 204.

If, from the time a negligent act of the defendant occurs, the ensuing consequences flow from and become attributable to his conduct as the cause which controlled and led to the final event, his negligence thus becomes the efficient cause and is proximate in its character, if he ought reasonably to have foreseen that a personal injury might result therefrom. "It is not required that the 'specific' injury or 'such' an injury as is complained of was or ought to have been specifically anticipated as the natural and probable consequences of the wrongful act. It is sufficient if the facts and circumstances are such that the consequences attributable to the wrongful conduct charged are within the field of reasonable anticipation." Winchel v. Goodyear, 105 N. W. 824, 826, 126 Wis. 271 (citing Morey v. Lake Superior Terminal & Transfer Ry. Co., 103 N. W. 271, 125 Wis. 148, 12 L. R. A. [N. S.] 221).

If one desires to save an objection to an instruction that proximate cause is that which naturally produces the event, and without which the event could not have happened, because it omits the condition that the result must be such as a person of ordinary prudence should have foreseen, he must request a special charge upon the matter. Thompson & Ford Lumber Co. v. Thomas (Tex.) 147 S. W. 296, 303 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5760).

An instruction defining proximate cause as that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new independent cause, produces the event, and without which the event would not have occurred, was not objectionable for failure to require that defendant must have reasonably anticipated injury as the result of the acts for which it was sought to be held liable. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Turner (Tex.) 138 S. W. 1128, 1127.

An instruction, defining "proximate cause" as "such a cause in the absence of which injury would not have happened," was erroneous as ignoring the distinction between proximate and remote cause, and leaving out the essential element that the result must be such as a person of ordinary prudence should have foreseen as likely to occur, as a probable consequence in the light of all the attending circumstances. Gulf Cooperage Co. v. Abernathy, 116 S. W. 869, 871, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 137.

In an action by a servant for personal injuries, a definition of "proximate cause" as a cause without which the injury would not have occurred, while erroneous because failing to state that such a cause must be one from which it could have been reasonably anticipated that the injury would result as a natural and probable consequence, was cured by other instructions stating that the jury could not find for plaintiff unless the negligent failure of defendants to inform plaintiff that the dangers incident to his occupation evidenced a want of care on defendants' part and that defendants should have reasonably anticipated injury to plaintiff as the probable result of such want of care. Rice v. Dewberry (Tex.) 93 S. W. 715, 719.

To render a master liable for an injury there must be a direct causal connection between his misconduct and the injury, and the latter must be the direct result of some negligent act of the master. But he is chargeable with the natural and probable consequences of his own act and the causal connection will be sufficient if, according to the usual experience of mankind, the result ought to have been foreseen and provided against by him. The intervening act of a third person or other agency contributing to, and bringing about, a condition necessary to produce the injurious effect of the original negligence, will not excuse the first wrongdoer, if the intervening cause and its probable consequence be such as should have been anticipated by the latter. The test is to be found in the probable injurious consequences which were to be anticipated, not in the number of subsequent events and agencies which might arise. Trickey v. Clark, 93 Pac. 457, 460, 50 Or. 516 (citing Ahern v. Oregon Telephone & Telegraph Co., 33 Pac. 403, 35 Pac. 549, 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 685; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co., 51 N. E. 1, 171 Mass. 536, 41 L. R. A. 794).

A wrongful act is not the "proximate cause" of an injury which is not the ordinary and natural consequence of such act unless the person doing the act knows, or has reasonable means of knowing, that consequences not usually resulting from the act are by reason of some existing cause likely to intervene so as to cause the damage. Stewart v. City of Ripon, 38 Wis. 584, 590.

There are two essential elements in the doctrine of "proximate cause": (1) It must appear that the injury was the natural or probable consequence of the negligent or wrongful act; (2) that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of attending circumstances. A fire started in a building some distance from plaintiff's hotel, for which defendant railroad company was not responsible. The fire burned several buildings and spread to and burned certain piles of lumber on and along defendant's right of way, from which piles it spread to plaintiff's hotel and destroyed it. Held, that defendant's negligence, if any, in permitting such lumber to be piled on its right of way adjacent to plaintiff's hotel, was not the "proximate cause" of the burning of the hotel. Bowers v. East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co., 57 S. E. 453, 454, 144 N. C. 684, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446.

The first requisite of "proximate cause" is the doing or omitting to do an act which a person of ordinary prudence would foresee might naturally or probably produce the injury, and the second requisite is that it did produce it, and where a trespasser on defendant's train was forcibly ejected therefrom by defendant's brakeman, while the train was moving rapidly, and in falling struck a clearance post by the side of the track, and was thereby thrown under the car wheels and injured, the wrongful act of the brakeman was the "proximate cause" of the injury. Hayes v. Southern Ry. Co., 53 S. E. 847, 848, 141 N. C. 195.

To warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the "proximate cause" of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances. Where it is alleged that deceased died from a shot fired by third persons while deceased was in the custody of officers of the law under arrest, and that his death was caused by the negligence of such officers in failing to protect deceased, the "proximate cause" of his death was the shot, and not the negligence of the officers in failing to protect him. Jarnagin v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 133 Fed. 892, 894, 66 C. C. A. 622, 68 L. R. A. 499 (quoting from Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 475, 24 L. Ed. 256).

The rule in determining what is "proximate cause" is that the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence charged, such a consequence as under the surrounding circumstances of the case might and ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer as likely to flow from his act. Wires of a telephone company and of an electric light company were strung on the same poles. The telephone wires maintained below the electric light wires became broken. The electric light wires also became broken, and both wires emitted sparks, and one was injured by coming in contact with the electrically charged telephone wires. The telephone wires became charged by coming in contact with the electric light wires. The proximate cause of the injury was the defective condition of the electric light wires. Oklahoma Gas. & Electric Co. v. Lukert, 84 Pac. 1076, 1081, 16 Okl. 397.

Negligence, to be the "proximate cause" of an injury, must be such that a person of ordinary caution and prudence would have foreseen that an injury would likely result therefrom; not that the specific injury would result, but an injury of some character. In an action against the owners of an oil well to recover damages for the loss of tools, etc., by fire resulting from an explosion, on the ground of negligence in causing the well to be shot with nitroglycerine late in the evening instead of waiting until the following day, and in failing to leave a suitable person in charge during the night, where the evidence showed that an explosion occurred about 9 o'clock in the nighttime when no one was present, that there was no fire about the premises, and there was no evidence showing how the escaping oil came in contact with the fire or what the immediate or direct cause of the explosion was, the alleged acts of negligence were the remote and not the "proximate cause" of the injury, and the proximate cause was, necessarily, some independent agency. The acts of the owner only furnished the condition by which the injury was made possible. Comes v. Dabney, 102 Pac. 488, 490, 79 Kan. 820 (citing and adopting Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Parry, 73 Pac. 105, 67 Kan. 515, Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Columbia, 69 Pac. 338, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L. R. A. 399).

In order to make a negligent act the "proximate cause" of an injury, it is not necessary that the particular injury and particular manner of its occurrence could reasonably have been foreseen; but if the consequences follow in unbroken sequence from the wrong to the injury, without an intervening efficient cause, it is sufficient if at the time of the negligence the wrongdoer might by the exercise of ordinary care have foreseen that some injury might result from his negligence. Where a railway company allowed combustible material to accumulate upon its right of way next to intestate's premises, it was bound to anticipate that, if a fire started therein and endangered her property, she would try to put it out; and where a fire started from a spark from defendant's locomotive and spread to intestate's premises, and she, in attempting to extinguish it and while exercising due care, was burned to death, defendant's negligence was the "proximate cause" of the injury, since it should have anticipated such a result as probable. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Siler, 82 N. E. 362, 364, 229 Ill. 390, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 819, 11 Ann. Cas. 368.

A carrier is not liable for a loss of property in shipment through an act of God, which could not reasonably have been foreseen, although, but for its previous negligence, by which the shipment was delayed, the property would have escaped the danger and the loss would not have occurred. In such case the negligence is not the "proximate cause" of the injury. Empire State Cattle Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 135 Fed. 135, 141.

Negligence of a person cannot be the "proximate cause" of a harm to another following it unless under all the attending circumstances ordinary prudence would have admonished the person sought to be charged with the negligence that his act or omission would probably result in injury to some one. The general test as to whether negligence is the "proximate cause" of an accident is therefore said to be whether it is such that a person of ordinary intelligence should have foreseen that an accident was liable to be produced thereby. "Proximate cause" is the probable cause. A farmer who had driven a team of 11 year old horses 17 miles hitched one of them, as he had been frequently in the habit of doing, to a hitching rail in front of a store, and was engaged in unloading his wagon, going back and forth for this purpose but a short distance. The halter was apparently in good condition, and no defect therein was shown. While the team was standing quietly, a boy, in turning over the hitching rail near the head of the team, struck the nose of the one hitched with his foot, which frightened the team and caused them to break loose, by breaking the halter, and run away, causing damage. Held, that the striking of the horse by the boy was the "proximate cause" of the accident. Stephenson v. Corder, 80 Pac. 938, 939, 71 Kan. 475, 69 L. R. A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500 (quoting 1 Thomp. Neg. § 50).

Where negligence in setting out a fire is established, changes in the direction and force of the wind carrying the result of the negligence further than it would otherwise have gone does not affect the liability for the injuries, though entirely unforeseen. E. T. & H. K. Ide v. Boston & M. R. R., 74 Atl. 401, 406, 83 Vt. 66.

Inevitable or necessary result

The "proximate cause" of an injury is the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. Zellers v. Delaney, 78 A. 212.

A "proximate cause" is one in which is involved the idea of necessity. It is one the connection between which and the effect is plain and intelligible; it is one which can be used as a term by which a proposition can be demonstrated; that is, one which can be reasoned from conclusively. The "proximate cause" being given, the effect must follow, and it is this idea of necessity—the necessary connection between the cause and the effect—that is the prime distinction between a proximate and a remote cause. McGovern v. Degnon-McLean Contracting Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 408, 410, 120 App. Div. 524 (citing 4 Am. Law Rev. 201, 203; Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 99, 44 L. R. A. 216).

A "proximate cause" is one which is involved in the idea of necessity. A city is not liable for injury to a horse slipping upon asphalt pavement and getting its foot wedged in a sewer culvert opening in the face of the sidewalk curb, 3 feet 8 inches long and 8 inches high above the street level; it not appearing similar accidents had ever occurred or that the city had notice of the likelihood of such an accident. Vaccarini v. City of New York, 104 N. Y. Supp. 928, 931, 54 Misc. Rep. 600.

Intervening agency

An alleged act of negligence, which would not have produced the injury but for the interposition of an independent cause which could not have been reasonably anticipated, but which turned aside the natural sequence of events and produced the result, is not the "proximate cause" of the injury and is not actionable. The intervening cause is the only "proximate cause." American Bridge Co. v. Seeds, 144 Fed. 605, 610, 75 C. C. A. 407, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041.

An act of negligence is not the "proximate cause" of an injury, in a legal sense, where there was an independent intervening cause, unless the injury was not only the natural, but the probable, result of such negligence, and the intervening cause should reasonably have been foreseen. The Santa Rita, 173 Fed. 413, 417.

The test by which to determine whether the intervening act of an intelligent agent which has become the efficient cause of an injury shall be considered a new and independent cause, breaking the sequence of events, put in motion by the original or primary negligence, is whether the intervening act and the resultant injury is one that the author of the primary negligence could have reasonably foreseen and expected. Harton v. Forest City Telephone Co., 54 S. E. 299, 302, 141 N. C. 455.

"In speaking of an adequate and independent intervening cause, as cutting off the connecting and negligent and a subsequent injury, it is not proper to require that the intervening cause to be searched for be one involving negligence or wrong." Cavanaugh v. Centerville Block Coal Co., 109 N. W. 308, 306, 131 Iowa, 700, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907.

"In determining the proximate cause we must look to the direct and efficient cause—that is, the thing amiss—and determine whether the injury resulted therefrom. An intervening human agency may break the connection between the negligent act and the subsequent injury, but that agency must act either independently of the preceding negligence, or the intervening action must have been negligent, so as to constitute an independent proximate cause, in order to break the connection between the wrong complained of and the injury." Phinney v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 98 N. W. 358, 361, 122 Iowa, 488.

The direct or "proximate" consequences of a wrongful act are those which occur without any intervening independent cause; and the fact that the injuries chiefly complained of were caused immediately by the act of plaintiffs in walking from the place where they left the cars to the next station will not relieve defendant from liability therefor, where it appears that the plaintiffs' act in so walking was rendered apparently necessary by defendant's wrongful act, and was not negligent. Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 11 N. W. 356, 363, 54 Wis. 342, 41 Am. Rep. 41.

Where, in the sequence of events between an original default and a final injury, an entirely independent and unrelated cause intervenes which is of itself sufficient to stand as the cause of the mischief, the second cause is ordinarily regarded as the "proximate cause" and the other as the "remote cause." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Calhoun, 29 Sup. Ct. 321, 323, 213 U. S. 1, 53 L. Ed. 671 (citing Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. [74 U. S.] 44, 52, 19 L. Ed. 65, 67).

A negligent act may be the "proximate cause" of an injury, though not the sole cause, where the intervening act is set in motion or induced by the negligent act, and the consequence is one that should have been foreseen. Dannenhower v. Western Union Tel. Co., 67 Atl. 207, 218 Pa. 216 (citing Marsh v. Giles, 60 Atl. 315, 211 Pa. 17).

It is a principle of law, applicable to the doctrine of "proximate cause," that if the original act was wrongful, and would naturally in the course of events prove injurious to some person and does actually result in injury through the intervention of other causes not wrongful, the injury is referable to the wrongful cause. But if the original wrong becomes injurious only in consequence of the intervention of some distinct wrongful act by another, the injury is imputed to the last wrong as a proximate cause. Currier v. McKee, 59 Atl. 442, 443, 99 Me. 364, 3 Ann. Cas. 57 (citing Cooley, Torts, p. 76).

"The breach of duty upon which an action is brought must be, not only the cause, but the 'proximate cause,' of the damage to the plaintiff. * * * The 'proximate cause' of an event must be understood to be that which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred. If, after the cause in question has been in operation, some independent force comes in and produces an injury not its natural or probable effect, the author of the cause is not responsible. Supposing that, if it had not been for the intervention of a responsible third party, the defendant's negligence would have produced no damage to the plaintiff, is the defendant liable to the plaintiff? This question must be answered in the negative, for the general reason that casual connection between negligence and damage is broken by the interposition of independent responsible human action. I am negligent on a particular subject-matter as to which I am not contractually bound. Another person moving independently comes in and either negligently or maliciously so acts as to make my negligence injurious to a third person. If so, the person so intervening acts as a nonconductor and insulates my negligence, so that I cannot be sued for the mischief which the person so intervening directly produces. He is the one who is liable to the person injured." McVay v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 266-268, 113 App. Div. 724 (quoting and adopting definition in Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 99, 44 L. R. A. 216; distinguishing Sheridan v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 490).

When two or more causes culminate in an event, one may be nearer and more immediately connected with the result than the others. It is only when something occurs, subsequent to the defendant's act, which makes it result in what would not otherwise have happened, that the latter or intervening cause is said to be the efficient one, and for the result of which the original actor is not responsible in law. Where a motorman in charge of a train of cars on an electric railroad in a mine was injured in a collision with a car negligently left on the track by the preceding train, and the track was not sufficiently lighted to enable the motorman to see plainly obstructions so left, the "proximate cause" of the injury was the negligence of the mineowner in failing to provide proper lights, and not the negligence of the motorman's fellow servant in charge of the first train in permitting one of their cars to obstruct the tracks, or the failure to provide suitable lights on the motor car, etc. Central Coal & Iron Co. v. Pearce (Ky.) 80 S. W. 449, 450.

When one has violated a duty imposed upon him by the common law, he should be held liable to every person injured thereby whose injury is the natural and probable consequence of his misconduct, and this liability extends to such injuries as might reasonably have been anticipated under ordinary circumstances as the natural and probable result of the wrongful act. If, subsequently to the original wrongful or negligent act, a new cause has intervened of itself sufficient to stand as the cause of the misfortune, the former must be considered as too remote. The original wrongful or negligent act will not be regarded as the "proximate cause" where any new agency, not within the reasonable contemplation of the original wrongdoer, has intervened to bring about the injury. Where, however, the intervening cause and its probable or reasonable consequences are such as could reasonably have anticipated by the original wrongdoer, the casual connection between the original wrongful act and the subsequent injury is not broken, and an action may lie therefor. The act of a railway ticket agent infected with smallpox in exposing himself to plaintiff, who purchased tickets from him, was the "proximate cause" of plaintiff's wife contracting the disease, where plaintiff contracted it and communicated it to her. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Raney, 99 S. W. 589, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 517.

The question of "proximate cause" always is: "Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury—a continuous operation? Did the fact constitute a continuous succession of events, so linked together as to make a natural whole? Or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury? It is admitted that the rule is difficult of application. But it is generally held that in order to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of the injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen, in the light of the attending circumstances." In the case at bar the injury resulting to defendant's colt in trying to get over a barbed wire fence to where plaintiff's colts were could not have been anticipated by plaintiff in permitting his colts to remain in the highway adjoining defendant's land. It is true the remote cause of the injury was the fact that plaintiff's colts were on defendant's land or at large. The "proximate" cause seems to have been the efforts of defendant's colt to get over the fence, thereby becoming entangled in the barbed wire resulting in its injury. The proximate cause of the injury therefore was the act of defendant's colt. Louiseau v. Arp, 114 N. W. 701, 703, 21 S. D. 566, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, 130 Am. St. Rep. 741.

"What in law is a 'proximate cause' is well expressed in the definition found in the case of Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 474, 24 L. Ed. 256. The primary cause may be the 'proximate cause' of a disaster, though it operates through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may be moved by force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause of the movement, or as in the oft-cited case of the squib thrown in the market place. Scott v. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 592. The question always is: Was there any unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury, a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a succession of events so linked together as to make a natural whole? Or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury? This definition is quoted with approval in Mack v. South Bound R. Co., 29 S. E. 905, 52 S. C. 324, 40 L. R. A. 679, 68 Am. St. Rep. 913. This court then says: There may be a succession of intermediate causes, each produced by the one preceding and producing the one following it. It must appear that the injury was the natural consequence of the wrongful act or omission. The new, independent, intervening cause must be one not produced by the wrongful act or omission, but independent of it, and adequate to bring the injurious results. Whether the natural connection of events was maintained or was broken by such new, independent cause is generally a question for the jury. The rule is thus stated in Harrison v. Berkley (S. C.) 1 Strob. 525, 549, 47 Am. Dec. 578. It is therefore required that the consequences to be answered for should be natural as well as proximate. 7 Bing. 211; 5 Barn. & Adol. 645. By this I understand, not that they should be such as upon a calculation of chances would be likely to occur, nor such as extreme prudence might anticipate, but only that they should be such as have actually ensued one from another, without the occurrence of any such extraordinary conjuncture of circumstances, or the intervention of any such extraordinary result, as that the usual course of nature should seem to have been departed from. In requiring concurring consequences that they should be proximate and natural to constitute legal damage, it seems that, in proportion as one quality is strong, may the other be dispensed with; that which is immediate cannot be considered unnatural; that which is reasonably to be expected will be regarded, although it may be considerably removed. Bennett v. Lockwood (N. Y.) 20 Wend. 223, 32 Am. Dec. 532." Cooper v. Richland County, 56 S. E. 958, 959, 76 S. C. 202, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 799, 121 Am. St. Rep. 946.

The question of "proximate cause" "is to be determined as a fact, in view of the circumstances of fact attending it. The primary cause may be the proximate cause of the disaster, though it may operate through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may move by a force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause, or as in the oft-cited case of the squib thrown in the market place. The question always is: Was there an unbroken connection between the wrongful act and the injury—a continuous operation? Did the facts constitute a continuous succession of events so linked together as to make a natural whole, or was there some new and independent cause intervening between the wrong and the injury? It is admitted that the rule is difficult of application. But it is generally held that in order to warrant a finding that negligence, or an act amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligent or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of attending circumstances." McKibbin v. F. E. Bax & Co., 113 N. W. 158, 159, 79 Neb. 577, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646, 126 Am. St. Rep. 677 (quoting and adopting definition in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469-474, 24 L. Ed. 256); Sipes v. Puget Sound Electric Ry., 102 Pac. 1057, 1059, 54 Wash. 47 (quoting and adopting definition in Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 473, 24 L. Ed. 256).

Where an injury attributed to a particular cause occurs through or by means of some intervening cause from which the injury follows as a direct and immediate consequence, the law will refer the damage to the last proximate cause and refuse to attribute it to that cause which was more remote. The reason for this rule is found in the impossibility of tracing consequences through successive steps to the remote cause and the necessity of pausing in the investigation in the chain of events at the point beyond which experience and observation convince us we cannot press our inquiries safely. As stated by Addison: "If the wrong and the resulting damage are not known by common experience to be naturally and usually in sequence, and the damage does not according to the ordinary course of events follow from the wrong, then the wrong and damage are not sufficiently conjoined and concatenated as cause and effect to support an action." Therefore, where an operating cause is intercepted by an independent force and by that force the injury is produced not in its natural or probable effect, the author of the original operating cause is not responsible. The producing cause of an injury must be one which would naturally bring about the injurious result, and the result must have actually occurred, and therefore, if a party be guilty of an act of negligence which would naturally produce an injury to another, but before the injury actually results a third person does some act which is the immediate cause of the injury, such third person is alone responsible, and the original party is not responsible, though the injury would not have occurred but for his negligence. The logical rule in this connection is that a person guilty of negligence should be held responsible for all the consequences which a prudent and experienced man, fully acquainted with all the cir-circumstances which in fact existed, whether they could have been ascertained by reasonable diligence or not, would at the time of the negligent act have thought reasonably possible to follow if they had occurred to his mind. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co., 41 South. 17, 18, 146 Ala. 404 (citing Cooley, Torts, p. 73, § 69; Bish. Noncont. Law, §§ 41, 42; Whart. Neg. § 75; Shear. & R. Neg. § 26; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. Ry. Co., 19 N. W. 744, 54 Mich. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 790; Western Ry. of Alabama v. Mutch, 11 South. 894, 97 Ala. 194, 21 L. R. A. 316, 38 Am. St. Rep. 179; Armstrong v. Montgomery St. Ry. Co., 26 South. 349; 123 Ala. 233; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 2 South. 337, 80 Ala. 600; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Quick, 28 South. 14, 125 Ala. 553).

"When a plaintiff, through the negligence of defendant, is placed in a situation where he must adopt a perilous alternative, or where, in the terror of an emergency for which he is not responsible and for which defendant is responsible, he acts wildly or negligently and suffers in consequence, such negligent conduct under these circumstances is not 'contributory negligence' for the reason that persons in great peril are not required to exercise all that presence of mind and carefulness which are justly required of a careful and prudent man under ordinary circumstances. In such case the negligence of the defendant is the 'proximate cause' of the injury, and plaintiff may have his action * * * even though the injury would not have happened if the acts had not been done." Texas Midland R. Co. v. Byrd, 90 S. W. 185, 187, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 184 (quoting and adopting definition in Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 14; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Neff, 28 S. W. 283, 87 Tex. 303).

Where the setting of a fire by and from a locomotive of the defendant was the "proximate cause" of the injury to plaintiff's trees, it was none the less so by reason of a change in the direction of the wind which was blowing at the time the fire was set, and which continued to blow without any extraordinary increase in its velocity, until the flames were carried to the trees of plaintiff injuring and destroying them. A simple change in the direction of the wind is not an intervening cause that will prevent recovery. Florida East Coast R. Co. v. Welch, 44 South. 250, 256, 53 Fla. 145, 12 Ann. Cas. 210.

Where a bridge tender was primarily negligent in failing to open the bridge in time and there was no contributory negligence of those in charge of a vessel approaching the bridge, the operation by which the master undertook to stop the boat and the striking of a pier were not such intervening causes as prevented the bridge tender's original negligence for constituting the "proximate cause" of the injury. Southern R. Co.

v. Reeder, 44 South. 690, 701, 152 Ala. 227, 126 Am. St. Rep. 23.

Where one drove negligently at a rapid rate along a public alley and ran upon a guy wire negligently anchored by a telephone company in the alley, overturning the vehicle, and causing personal injuries to plaintiff, the fact that the negligence of the driver intervened between that of the telephone company and the injury to plaintiff does not prevent the company from being liable therefor. Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. Gasper, 93 S. W. 1057, 1058, 123 Ky. 128, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548.

Natural and probable result

The "proximate cause" is that which produces the injury as a natural and probable result. Roedler v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 88, 91, 129 Wis. 270; Feldschneider v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 99 N. W. 1034, 1037, 122 Wis. 423.

For negligence to be the "proximate cause" of an injury, the injury must be the natural and probable result thereof. Banderob v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 113 N. W. 738, 743, 133 Wis. 249; Lemke v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 136 N. W. 286, 288, 149 Wis. 535; Monaghan v. Northwestern Fuel Co., 122 N. W. 1066, 1068, 140 Wis. 457; Russell v. Westmoreland County, 26 Pa. Sup. Ct. 425, 429; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Knisel, 96 S. W. 342, 345, 79 Ark. 608; Seith v. Commonwealth Electric Co., 89 N. E. 425, 427, 241 Ill. 252, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978, 132 Am. St. Rep. 204.

For a negligent or wrongful act to be the "proximate cause" of an injury, the injury must be the natural and probable consequence thereof. Bowers v. East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co., 57 S. E. 458, 454, 144 N. C. 684, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Schubert (Tex.) 130 S. W. 708, 709; Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co. v. Benton, 110 S. W. 1037, 1038, 86 Ark. 289; McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co., 144 Fed. 788, 792, 75 C. C. A. 518; Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. v. Weeks, 83 Pac. 406, 408, 72 Kan. 190, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515; Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. Lukert, 84 Pac. 1076, 1081, 16 Okl. 397; Marsh v. Great Northern Paper Co., 64 Atl. 844, 850, 101 Me. 489; Logan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 129 S. W. 575, 577, 139 Ky. 202; Butler v. Gulf Pipe Line Co. (Tex.) 144 S. W. 340, 342.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is an act of negligence which produces it, as its natural and probable consequence. Brubaker v. Kansas City Electric Light Co., 110 S. W. 12, 14, 130 Mo. App. 439 (quoting and adopting definition in Cole v. German Savings & Loan Soc., 124 Fed. 114, 59 C. C. A. 595, 63 L. R. A. 416).

An act to constitute "probable cause" of an injury must have been so connected with the injury that the injury would naturally and probably result therefrom. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dickens, 103 S. W. 750, 755, 7 Ind. T. 16.

To warrant a finding that negligence or an act not amounting to wanton wrong is the "proximate" cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act. Jarnagin v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 133 Fed. 802, 804, 66 C. C. A. 622, 68 L. R. A. 499.

An instruction on "proximate cause," requiring the injury to have been reasonably foreseen or expected as the natural result of the act or omission complained of, in substance required that the injury should be the natural and probable result of such act or omission, and was therefore unobjectionable. Olwell v. Skobis, 105 N. W. 777-783, 126 Wis. 308.

Where it is said that the injury must be the "natural and probable consequence of the act of negligence," it means, tracing the effect to the cause, was it probable and natural? Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 98 S. W. 670, 672, 120 Mo. App. 168.

The natural and probable consequences of a wrongful act or omission means any consequence, immediate or removed, that is directly traceable by natural laws of causation to the wrongful act as the major force. What are regarded as natural and probable consequences are sometimes defined to be such results and effects as according to the usual experience of mankind ought to have been apprehended. The question is never whether the result is possible but was it probable; that is, would it appear probable according to common experience and observation? P. H. & F. M. Roots Co. v. Meeker, 73 N. E. 253, 254, 165 Ind. 132.

Where, in an action by a passenger for injuries received by waiting at an unheated depot, plaintiff claimed that consumption resulted from exposure to the cold, a charge defining "proximate cause" as the efficient cause, without which the injury would not have occurred, was insufficient for failing to contain the element as to whether the negligent omission complained of was the natural and probable cause of the injury. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Turner (Tex.) 93 S. W. 195, 198.

"It is sufficient to say that, when an act of negligence has been committed, or a wrongful act done, resulting in injury or damage, the party committing it will be responsible for all the consequences that naturally and reasonably flow from the negligent or wrongful act, although the result may not be immediately connected with the cause. It is a familiar rule that there can be no recovery for the negligent acts of another unless they were the 'proximate cause' of the injury complained of." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Daugherty (Ky.) 108 S. W. 336, 338 (citing and adopting Setter's Adm'r v. City of Maysville, 69 S. W. 1074, 114 Ky. 60; Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. Gasper, 93 S. W. 1057, 123 Ky. 128, 9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 548; Snyder v. Arnold, 92 S. W. 289, 122 Ky. 557).

"Proximate cause" is not only that cause without which the accident would not have happened, but must also be a cause resulting from the negligent act or omission from which the injury would naturally and probably result. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Paschall, 92 S. W. 446, 448, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 357.

"The 'proximate cause' is to be defined generally as the cause which led to or might naturally be expected to produce the result. Whether plaintiff who was struck by a street car was the proximate cause of the collision, depends upon whether she used due diligence in watching the approaching car before attempting to cross the track, or looked in sufficient time to come within the usual prudential requirements." Palmer v. Portland Ry., Light & Power Co., 108 Pac. 211-213, 56 Or. 262.

To constitute "proximate cause" creating liability for negligence, the injury must have been the natural and probable consequences of the negligent act. It is the cause, which naturally produces a given result. The negligence must be such that by the usual course of events would result in an injury unless independent moral agencies intervene in the particular injury. But where an event is followed in natural sequence by a result it is adapted to produce or aid in producing, the result is the consequence of the event. It is not necessary, however, that the injury should be the usual, necessary, or inevitable result of the negligence. In addition to the requirement that the result should be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence, it is commonly stated that the consequence should be one which, in the light of attending circumstances, an ordinarily prudent man ought reasonably to have foreseen might probably occur as the result of his negligence. If the injury could not have been reasonably anticipated as the probable result of an act of negligence, such act is either remote cause or no cause. A prior cause and remote cause cannot be made the basis of an action if such remote cause did nothing more than furnish the condition, or give rise to the occasion by which the injury was made possible, if there intervened between such prior or remote cause and the injury a distinct, successive, unrelated, efficient cause of the injury. If no danger existed in the condition except because of the independent cause, such condition was not the proximate cause. Defendant railroad companies placed a car on the switch of a manufacturing company, the brakes of which were known to be bad by their employes, who chocked it on a grade to prevent it from moving, and thereafter employés of the manufacturing company with knowledge that the brake would not hold attempted to let it down for unloading by controlling it by means of chocks, but the chocks failed to hold, and it ran into other cars on the switch, which were knocked against plaintiff, who was engaged in picking up coal in the manufacturing company's employment. Held, in an action against the railroad companies for resulting injuries, that the employés of the manufacturing company were negligent in attempting to move the car, and the negligence of the manufacturing company's employés in attempting to move the car was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, and not the defective brake. Logan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 129 S. W. 575, 577, 139 Ky. 202 (quoting and adopting definition in 20 Cyc. pp. 492, 493; Thomp. Neg. § 2).

Nearest or next cause

It is only when the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is to be charged with the disaster. Kremer v. New York Edison Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 883, 888, 102 App. Div. 433.

In determining the "proximate cause" of an injury, it is not material whether it is first or last in the succession of events resulting therein, provided it is the responsible cause. Peru Heating Co. v. Lenhart, 95 N. E. 680, 684, 48 Ind. App. 319.

By "proximate cause" is not meant the last cause of an injury, but it may be any act which aided in producing the result. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Trigo, 108 S. W. 1193, 1194, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

"Proximate cause" need not necessarily be the nearest cause, which may be merely an instrument of the dominant or efficient cause. Richmond Coal Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co., Limited, of London, England, 159 Fed. 985, 987.

Neither proximity in point of time nor space is an appropriate part of the definition of "proximate cause" in a personal injury case. Ward v. North Carolina R. Co., 76 S. E. 717, 719, 161 N. C. 179.

"Proximate cause" does not mean the last cause or the act nearest to the injury, but such acts wanting in ordinary care as actually aided in producing the injury as a direct and existing cause, such as might reasonably have been contemplated as probable under the existing circumstances; nor is it necessary that the particular event which occurred should have been contemplated, but it is enough that the probable happening of some accident of the kind involving damage to the property of others should have been contemplated and guarded against. St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. Maddox (Tex.) 152 S. W. 225, 227.

"Proximate cause" is probable cause. It does not mean the last act of cause or act nearest to the injury, but such act wanting in ordinary care as actually aided in producing the injury as a direct and existing cause. It need not be the sole cause, but must be a concurring cause, such as might reasonably have been contemplated as involving a result under the attending circumstances. It is such cause as would probably lead to injury, and which actually has led to it. It need not appear that the injuries complained of resulted instantly and immediately from the act, since the law regards one act as the proximate cause of another without regard to the lapse of time where no other cause intervenes between such act and the injuries, but there must be nothing to break the causal connection between the act and the injuries. Brown v. Oregon-Washington R. & Nav. Co., 128 Pac. 38, 40, 63 Or. 396.

It is not necessarily the last link in the chain of events which constitutes "proximate cause," but that which is the procuring, efficient, and predominant cause; that from which the effect might be expected to follow, without the concurrence of any unforeseen circumstances. Russell v. German Fire Ins. Co. of City of Pittsburgh, Pa., 111 N. W. 400, 403, 100 Minn. 528, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 326 (citing Ransler v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 20 N. W. 332, 32 Minn. 331; Christianson v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 69 N. W. 640, 67 Minn. 94; Strobeck v. Bren, 101 N. W. 795, 93 Minn. 428; Phil. Ins., §§ 1132, 1134).

The "proximate cause" of an injury is not always the last act of cause or the nearest act to the injury, but it may be such a negligent act as actively aids in producing the injury as a direct and existing concurrent cause, and such as might reasonably be expected to result in the injury. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Bellar, 112 S. W. 323, 326, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 154.

"The 'proximate cause' is not necessarily the immediate, near, or nearest cause, but the one that acts first, whether immediate to the injury, or such injury be reached by setting other causes in motion, each in order being started naturally by the one that precedes it, and altogether constituting a complete chain or succession of events, so united to each other by a close causal connection as to form a natural whole, reaching from the first or producing cause to the final result." Cary v. Preferred Accident Ins. Co. of New York, 106 N. W. 1055, 1056, 127 Wis. 67, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 926, 115 Am. St. Rep. 997, 7 Ann. Cas. 484 (quoting and adopting definition in Deisenrieter v. Kraus-Merkel Malting Co., 72 N. W. 735, 97 Wis. 288).

The "proximate cause" is not necessarily the fact immediately preceding the result complained of, but there may be a line of facts forming a series, the first of the series being the proximate cause. Mayrant v. City

In ordinary language, the proximate cause is the nearest cause, but in a legal sense an act of negligence may be deemed the proximate cause of the injury, though it may not be the last cause in a connected series of events which have led to the injury. Chicago, R. I. & G. R. Co. v. Coffee (Tex.) 126 S. W. 638, 640.

The nearest independent cause which is adequate to, and does, produce the result, is the proximate cause of the accident, and supersedes all remote causes. Yeates v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 89 N. E. 338, 341, 241 Ill. 205.

"In discussing legal causation, the phrase 'proximate cause' does not necessarily mean that which is nearest, but refers rather to the efficient cause, and in this sense is sometimes referred to as the immediate and direct cause, as opposed to remote; and the words 'proximate,' 'immediate,' and 'direct' are frequently used as synonymous." Godwin v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 48 S. E. 139, 141, 120 Ga. 747.

The expression "proximate cause" frequently signifies, not that act in a chain of causation nearest to the injury complained of, but the culpable act nearest to the injury. The movement of the elevator upward, as distinguished from negligence of the elevator operator in moving the elevator when he knew or should have known that a passenger's dress was caught in the door, was not the "proximate cause" of the accident, as a matter of law. Hensler v. Stix, 88 S. W. 108, 113, 113 Mo. App. 102.

An instruction that the "proximate cause" of anything means the nearest cause; the immediate cause; that cause in which there is nothing intervening between it and the effect or injury complained of—and that the negligence of defendant would not give plaintiff the right to recover unless it was the proximate cause of the injury, and that contributory negligence, unless the proximate cause of the injury, would be no defense, was proper. Anderson v. Southern Ry., 50 S. E. 202, 70 S. C. 490.

In determining "proximate cause," the inquiry is directed to the responsible cause, without reference to whether it is the first or last in the succession of events that resulted in the injury, and it has further been defined to be the efficient cause that necessarily sets the other cause in operation. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Acrea, 82 N. E. 1009, 1011, 42 Ind. App. 127 (citing Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Charman, 67 N. E. 923, 161 Ind. 95; Pennsylvania Co. v. Congdon, 33 N. E. 795, 134 Ind. 226, 39 Am. St. Rep. 251).

The "proximate cause" is not necessarily the one nearest to the event, but the primary cause may be the one proximately responsible for the result, although it may operate through one or more successive instruments. If the primary cause was so linked and bound to the events succeeding it that all together they create and become one continuous whole—the one event so operating upon the other as to tie the result to the primary cause—the latter will be the proximate cause of the injury. If there is some new and independent cause, disconnected from the first or original cause, operating in itself, which intervenes to produce the result, the chain of sequence will be broken, and the primary fault cannot be held to be the direct and proximate cause of the injury. Shippers' Compress & Warehouse Co. v. Davidson, 80 S. W. 1032, 1033, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 558.

The negligent act or omission, in order to be the "proximate cause" of an injury, must be the cause which produces the injury, but need not be the sole cause, or the last or nearest cause, it being sufficient if it concurs with some other cause, acting at the same time, which in combination with it causes the injury, or, if it sets in motion a chain of circumstances and operates on them in a continuous sequence, unbroken by a new or independent cause; the question being determined, not by the existence or nonexistence of intervening events, but by their character and the natural connection between the original act or omission and the injurious consequences. Seith v. Commonwealth Electric Co., 89 N. E. 425, 427, 241 Ill. 252, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978, 132 Am. St. Rep. 204.

"The 'proximate cause' of an injury is not necessarily the last cause or the one nearest the injury, but such act, wanting in ordinary care, as actively aided or concurred in producing the result. An act may be a proximate cause without being the sole cause; the only requirement being that it is a concurring cause such as aided in producing the injuries." Hence, where it requires the agency of the fellow servants of the injured employé and the employer to produce the result, or where both contribute to the result as concurrent forces, the presence or assistance of the act of fellow servants will not exculpate the other agency. Ray v. Pecos & N. T. R. Co., 88 S. W. 466, 468, 469, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 99 (citing Shippers' Compress & Warehouse Co. v. Davidson, 80 S. W. 1032, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 558).

"The 'proximate cause' of an accident or injury is sometimes described as the immediate cause, the nearest cause, the actual or direct cause, or the efficient cause." It was said by Mr. Justice Strong in Etna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 130, 24 L. Ed. 395, that: "The 'proximate cause' is the efficient cause; the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. The causes that are merely incidental, or instruments of a superior or controlling agency, are not proximate cause, and the responsible one, though they may be nearer in time to the result. It is only when the causes are independent of each other that the nearest is, of course, to be charged with disaster. A careful consideration of the authorities will vindicate this rule. Mr. Phillips, in his work on Insurance (section 1097), in speaking of a nisi prius case of a vessel burned by the master and crew to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy (Gordon v. Rimmington, 1 Camp. 123), says: "The maxim causa proxima spectatur afford no help in these cases, but is, in fact, fallacious; for, if two causes conspire, and one must be chosen, the more scientific inquiry seems to be whether one is not the efficient cause, and the other merely instrumental or merely incidental, and not which is nearer in place or time to the consummation of the catastrophe." Hence complaint in a personal injury action against a street railway, alleging that it negligently ran its car into a switch off the track and against a pole, throwing the plaintiff to the floor and injuring him, sufficiently alleged that defendant's negligence was the "proximate cause" of the injury. Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Schmidt, 71 N. E. 201, 202, 163 Ind. 360 (citing Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 21 N. E. 968, 119 Ind. 583, 6 L. R. A. 193; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Buck, 96 Ind. 346, 49 Am. Rep. 168; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Williams, 30 N. E. 696, 131 Ind. 30; Indianapolis Union Ry. Co. v. Houlihan, 60 N. E. 943, 157 Ind. 494, 503, 54 L. R. A. 787).

Nearest in time or place

Proximity in point of time or space is no part of the definition. Boyce v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 96 S. W. 670, 671, 120 Mo. App. 168; Georgetown Telephone Co. v. McCullough's Adm'r, 80 S. W. 782, 783, 118 Ky. 182, 111 Am. St. Rep. 294; Harton v. Forest City Telephone Co., 54 S. E. 299, 301, 141 N. C. 455.

Proximity as to time or place is not important except as showing proximity of causation. City of Louisville v. Hart's Adm'r, 136 S. W. 212, 215, 143 Ky. 171, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207.

"Proximate cause" does not always mean the cause nearest in point of time. It means "closeness of causal relation, not nearness in time or distance." Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co., 103 N. W. 481, 487, 127 Iowa, 483.

The "proximate cause" of an injury is ascertained by determining the responsible cause without regard to its time or place in the succession of events resulting therein. Peru Heating Co. v. Lenhart, 95 N. E. 680, 684, 48 Ind. App. 319.

To be the "proximate cause," it is not necessary that the negligence be immediate in time, and so, where plaintiff, an employé of defendant, was injured by a log falling from a flat car which was improperly loaded, the negligence in loading is the proximate cause of the injury, though the accident did not occur until after the car was moved. Freeman v. Dells Paper & Pulp Co., 135 N. W. 540, 543, 150 Wis. 93.

"In law proximate and remote causes and effects do not have reference to time, nor distance, nor merely a succession of events. A wrongdoer is not merely responsible for the first result of his wrongful act, but he is also responsible for every succeeding injurious result which could have been foreseen by the exercise of reasonable diligence as the reasonable, natural, and probable consequence of his wrongful act." The law does not consider the causes of causes and their impulsions, but contents itself with the immediate cause. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Miles, 124 S. W. 1043, 92 Ark. 573 (dissenting opinion; quoting and adopting definition in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 377, 15 Am. Rep. 362; citing Whart. Neg. [2d Ed.] § 73).

"Proximate cause" in the law of negligence is not the cause nearest in point of time or in sequence of events. There may be, and frequently is, an intervening agency, a something which it is only reasonable to expect would or might happen; and in such case the remoter cause in point of time or in sequence of events is said to be the proximate cause, for the reason that the final result was made possible by the first negligent act or omission. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilkie, 90 Pac. 775, 776, 77 Kan. 791, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963, 127 Am. St. Rep. 464, 15 Ann. Cas. 731 (citing Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 354, 15 Am. Rep. 362; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. McBride, 37 Pac. 978, 54 Kan. 172).

In determining "proximate cause," no arbitrary limits can be fixed as to nearness in point of time or as to distance. Much more important are closeness of causal connection, the natural sequence of the original wrongful act, and whether the resulting loss was one which might reasonably have been anticipated to constitute a locomotive the proximate cause of a fire loss. It is not necessary that the loss should have been the inevitable result of the setting of a fire by the locomotive; but if it is the natural consequence, one likely to result from starting the fire, then it should have been anticipated by the railroad company and is the proximate result of any negligence on its part. A fire negligently started in the nighttime by a railroad company extended to plaintiff's premises, and he and others fought and partially subdued, but did not extinguish, it. After watching the fire for some time, and taking certain precautions to prevent its further spread, plaintiff, believing the danger was past, retired, after which the fire broke out anew and destroyed considerable property. Held, that it cannot be said as a matter of law that the original negligence in starting the fire was not the proximate cause of the final burning and loss. St.

Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. League, 80 Pac. 46, 47, 71 Kan. 79.

Negligence is the "proximate cause" of an injury if it appears that but for such negligence the injury would not have happened, even though not the nearest cause in the order of time. Yeates v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 145 Ill. App. 11, 22.

Primary cause

"The primary cause may be the 'proximate cause' of a disaster, though it may operate through successive instruments, as an article at the end of a chain may be moved by a force applied to the other end, that force being the proximate cause of the movement, or as in the oft-cited case of the squib thrown in the market place." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Raney (Tex. Civ. App.) 99 S. W. 589, 590 (quoting and adopting definition in Railway Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256).

"The primary cause is the 'proximate cause,' though it may act through successive instruments." Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co., 103 N. W. 481, 487, 127 Iowa, 483.

The doctrine of "proximate cause" can have no application where there was no negligence of the defendant to predicate the right of action on. "Primary" cause and "proximate" cause are not synonymous. The proximate cause of injury to an employé caused by a revolving fly wheel belt, against which he was thrown by slipping while attempting to lift a barrel, was the unguarded condition of the belt, and not his slipping or the fall of the barrel. Hartman v. Bertin & Jones Envelope Co., 127 N. Y. Supp. 187, 189, 71 Misc. Rep. 30.

Probable cause

"Proximate cause" means probable cause. Joslin v. Linder, 128 N. W. 500, 502, 26 S. D. 420.

"The general test as to whether negligence is the 'proximate cause' of an accident is therefore said to be whether it is such that a person of ordinary intelligence should have foreseen that an accident was liable to be produced thereby. 'Proximate cause' is therefore probable cause, and remote cause is improbable cause." In an action by a servant for personal injuries, it appeared that the injuries were caused by the fall of iron from a truck on which it was loaded, and that the accident occurred immediately after one of the wheels of the truck had dropped into a hole in the floor, which existed through the negligence of the master. The person in charge of the men with whom plaintiff was working directed them to stop the truck and pull it backwards to get the wheel out of the hole, and the accident occurred as they were doing so. As the dropping of the wheel into the hole and the direction of the foreman to pull the truck backwards were practically identical in point of time, and one the necessary result of the other, the existence of the defect in the floor was the "proximate cause" of the injuries. Missouri Malleable Iron Co. v. Dillon, 69 N. E. 12, 13, 17, 206 Ill. 145 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Thomp. Neg. § 50; Armour v. Golkowska, 66 N. E. 1037, 202 Ill. 144).

True, probable, and natural cause

Negligence to be the "proximate cause" of an injury must have been the natural and probable cause thereof. Southern Kansas R. Co. of Texas v. Emmett (Tex.) 139 S. W. 44, 47.

"Proximate cause" is such a cause as operates to produce particular consequences without the interference of any independent, unforeseen cause, without which the injury would not have occurred; or, in other words "proximate cause" is the true, probable, and natural cause. Pendroy v. Great Northern R. Co., 117 N. W. 531, 536, 17 N. D. 433.

PROXIMATE CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

In order to be "proximate contributory negligence," there must be that negligence which "in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new independent cause," contributes to the injuries and without which they would not have occurred. Jansen v. Southern Pac. Co., 89 Pac. 616, 617, 5 Cal. App. 12.

"The rule at common law and in this state still is that any contribution to an injury which directly produced it would bar the action in any case where statutory provisions to the contrary do not apply." Proximate contributory negligence is further explained in the following language: "If the injury was caused by the plaintiff's conduct, or was the immediate result of the plaintiff's conduct, to which the wrong of the defendant did or did not contribute as an immediate cause, the plaintiff cannot recover, but must bear the result of his own negligence or conduct." Contributory negligence is, when it proximately contributes to the infliction of the injury, a bar to an action, because a person cannot be permitted to rush upon an apparent danger, and then, because an injury ensues, saddle the other party with the pecuniary consequences of an injury which his own want of care brought upon him. Nashville R. Co. v. Norman, 67 S. W. 479, 482, 108 Tenn. 324 (citing Southern R. Co. v. Pugh, 37 S. W. 555, 97 Tenn. 627; East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Hull, 12 S. W. 419, 88 Tenn. 35).

PROXIMATE DAMAGE

See, also, Remote Damages.

The damages are said to be "proximate" when they are the direct, immediate, ordinary, usual, and natural result of the negligence, and therefore might have been reasonably expected. The damages must follow the negligence as the efficient cause, in unbroken sequence, without any intervening independent causes to break the continuity. Mueller v. Milwaukee, St. P. Ry. Co., 56 N. W. 914, 86 Wis. 340, 21 L. R. A. 721.

"Proximate damages" as a result of an unlawful act are those which are the natural and not "remote" consequence of such act. If, on the contrary, the damages complained of would not naturally and usually flow from the negligent act, but were brought about by some unforeseen casualty, they are "remote." Louiseau v. Arp, 114 N. W. 701, 703, 21 S. D. 566, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, 130 Am. St. Rep. 741 (quoting and adopting definition in 13 Cyc. p. 25).

"Proximate damages" are such as are ordinary and natural results of the negligence charged, and those that are usual, and therefore to be expected. Damages cannot be recovered against a railroad company for fright which results in nervous prostration and physical disability, where the fright is caused by the running of the railroad company's cars off the end of a switch and out into the street within 15 feet of the yard of the person frightened. Morse v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 77 S. W. 361, 362, 117 Ky. 11.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3300, 3301, providing that for breach of an obligation arising from contract the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all detriment "proximately caused thereby," and that no damages can be recovered which are not clearly ascertainable in both their nature and origin, a singer discharged from her employment without notice, in violation of her contract, could not recover damages to her health, nor for injury to her feelings or reputation, by reason of such discharge. "Injury to the plaintiff's health, feelings, or reputation would not be proximately caused by her wrongful discharge, nor would it be likely to result in the ordinary course of things." "Proximately caused thereby"—that is, such damages as must immediately follow and are produced by the act complained of—are the kind of damages for which the statute provides this measure, or such damages as in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result from the act. Westwater v. Rector, etc., of Grace Church, 73 Pac. 1055, 1056, 140 Cal. 339 (citing Friend & Terry Lumber Co. v. Miller, 8 Pac. 42, 67 Cal. 467).

PROXIMATE RESULT

The court, in an action for injuries to a servant, in response to a suggestion charged: "I did not tell you, if there was negligence on the part of the plaintiff, it had to be the 'proximate result' of the injuries to bar his recovery. The same rule applies to both sides. If one side was guilty of negligence, it must proximately result in injury, or he would not be entitled to recover. I mean, if plaintiff was guilty of negligence, to bar recovery, it must be the proximate result of his injury." Held that the use of the word "result," instead of "cause," did not render the instruction erroneous, since, if the injury must be the proximate result of the negligence, then the negligence must have proximately caused the injury. Sloss Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Stewart, 55 South. 785, 788, 172 Ala. 516.

PROXIMATELY

An instruction on contributory negligence, in an action for death at an interurban railway crossing, was not defective in the use of the word "approximately," instead of "proximately"; the two words being so closely allied in meaning that the use of the former, in a clause requiring such negligence to have "approximately" contributed to the injury, could not have misled the jury. Brooks v. Muncie & P. Traction Co., 95 N. E. 1006, 1008, 176 Ind. 298.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé, the court defined "proximate cause" and used in its instructions the word "proximate" several times, the use of the word "approximately" for "proximately" in a charge relating to proximate cause was not erroneous. Choctaw, O. & T. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 96 S. W. 1091, 1098, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 523.

PROXIMITY

See Dangerous Proximity.

"While 'proximity' or 'nearness' to an object is somewhat uncertain as a measure of distance, yet the use of such words as a definition, brings to the mind the idea that lands which are in fact far off, or distant, are not adjacent." United States v. St. Anthony R. Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 333, 337, 192 U. S. 524, 537, 48 L. Ed. 548.

PROXY

As creditor, see Creditor.

"The ordinary proxy, being intended to be for an election merely, does not enable the proxy to vote to dissolve the corporation, or to sell the entire corporate business and property, or to vote upon other important business, unless such proxy itself in general or special terms gives the proxy the power to vote on such questions." A proxy given by a member of a savings company, appointing one to vote in the member's place in all matters coming before any meeting of the stockholders, contemplates action of the stockholders only with reference to matters which could be submitted to them under such articles and by-laws as existed at that time, and confers no authority on the person holding the proxies to vote on the question of going into voluntary liquidation. McKee v. Home Savings & Trust Co., 98 N. W. 609, 611, 122 Iowa, 731 (quoting 2 Cook, Corp. [4th Ed.] § 610).

A "proxy" is defined by Webster to be "the agency for another who acts through the agent; authority to act for another, especially to vote in a legislative or corporate capacity;" and this is the only proper use of the word "proxy." It is an agency, and where the proxy is duly constituted, and there is no limitation upon its power, a vote by such proxy binds the owner of the stock or other matter acted upon to the same extent as if cast by the latter personally. In re Daniel, 134 N. Y. Supp. 254, 257, 149 App. Div. 777 (concurring opinion).

A "proxy" is one permitted to vote in the place of a stockholder of a corporation, and is presumably voicing the judgment and the will of his principal. Warren v. Pim, 59 Atl. 773, 783, 66 N. J. Eq. 353.

PRUDENCE

See Ordinary Prudence; Reasonable Prudence.

The Standard Dictionary gives, as one of the meanings of the word "prudence," good judgment and foresight in practical affairs; economy; discretion; sagacity. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Everett (Tex.) 86 S. W. 17, 18.

An instruction "that the term 'negligence' means the want of that care and prudence which a man of ordinary 'intelligence' would exercise under all the circumstances of the situation" is erroneous, where the case is bottomed on negligence and defended on the ground of contributory negligence, since it does not correctly define the term. "Intelligence" is not a synonym for either "caution," "prudence," or "care." Van Cleve v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co., 101 S. W. 632, 634, 124 Mo. App. 224.

PRUDENT

See Reasonably Prudent.

"Prudent" means sagacious in adapting means to ends; circumspect in action, or in determining any line of conduct; practically wise; judicious; careful; discreet; circumspect; sensible; opposed to rash—as a prudent man; and so a reasonably prudent man means a reasonably careful one. Kinsel v. North Butte Mining Co., 120 Pac. 797, 805, 44 Mont. 445.

PRUDENT PERSON

See Highly Prudent Person; Ordinarily Prudent Man; Reasonably Prudent.

"A 'prudent person' means the average prudent person or the ordinarily prudent person." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 908, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536 (quoting and adopting definition in Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Black [Tex.] 44 S. W. 673).

A charge in trespass for cutting timber that if defendant cut the timber intentionally and willfully, and did not exercise the care a "prudent person" would have exercised, he was liable, was sufficient as against the objection that the phrase "a prudent person" in the instruction should have been qualified by the word "ordinarily," in the absence of a request for a more specific charge; for the phrase "a prudent person" in the charge meant an ordinarily prudent person. Clevenger v. Blount (Tex.) 122 S. W. 529, 530.

An instruction that if the jury believed that the floods which overflowed plaintiff's land were unprecedented, and such as could not have been reasonably anticipated, by a prudent man skilled in construction of railroad trestles across such streams as the one in question, alleged to have caused the damage, defendant would not be liable, was not erroneous in that the words "prudent man" were not synonymous with "a person of ordinary prudence," and therefore required a higher degree of care than was required by law. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Kiersey (Tex.) 81 S. W. 1045, 1046.

PRUDENTIAL AFFAIRS

The phrase "prudential affairs," in Pub. St. 1901, c. 43, § 5, directing that the selectmen shall manage the "prudential affairs" of the town, means the transacting of business on behalf of the town, requiring the exercise of prudence and discretion. All matters and things necessary to be done in order to carry into effect the lawful powers of towns seem to be embraced in the phrase, and the selectmen may present a petition for the consent of the court to the discontinuance of a highway. Town of New London v. Davis, 59 Atl. 369, 373, 73 N. H. 72 (citing Sumner v. Town of Dalton, 58 N. H. 295, 297, and Pike v. Middleton, 12 N. H. 278, 282).

Rev. Laws, c. 25, § 23, authorizing towns to make by-laws for the direction and management of their "prudential affairs," does not authorize a town to adopt a by-law requiring the assessors thereof to keep a record of abatements of taxes, and annually to make a report of the valuation of the property of the town and the rate of taxation, etc., since the assessors are public officers, whose duties are defined by chapter 12, which does not require the performance of duties sought to be imposed by the by-law, and since the term "prudential affairs" embraces subjects affecting the accommodation and convenience of the inhabitants placed under the jurisdiction of towns by statute and usage. Cox v. Segee, 92 N. E. 620, 621, 206 Mass. 380.

"'Pruriency' is an elastic term. Matter and conduct which some good people deem prurient other good people deem chaste. There is no fixed standard of 'pruriency.'"

It is largely a matter of education and taste. And the same is true in respect of 'scandal' and 'shamelessness';" hence where a critic published of a book and its author that they were a "scandal" and "shameless," and that the author was "prurient," under circumstances that would not justify the charges beyond question, it was for the jury to say whether the inferences drawn by the critic from the facts were reasonably possible, and therefore permissible. MacDonald v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 92 N. Y. Supp. 37, 40, 45 Misc. Rep. 441.

PSEUDO

In determining whether or not it was libelous to designate one as a "pseudo" scientist, the court said: "'Pseudo' is derived from the Greek 'pseudein,' to cheat, to deceive, and is defined as a quasi prefix in compounds of Greek origin, meaning 'false'; 'counterfeit'; 'spurious'; 'sham.' It is freely used as an English prefix with the words of any origin." Cent. Dict. Stormonth, a most accurate lexicographer, derives it from the Greek "pseudes," lying, false, and defines it as "a word frequently prefixed to another, and meaning 'false,' 'spurious.'" MacDonald v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n, 98 N. Y. Supp. 116, 117, 111 App. Div. 465.

PTOSIS ABDOMINALIS

"Ptosis abdominalis" is a general letting down of the contents of the abdominal cavity. Krisinger v. City of Creston, 119 N. W. 526, 528, 141 Iowa, 164.
